Funds Denied 2 Agencies In $94,492,166 Budget Slash

Money Disallowed For Two White House Offices and Six Buildings in District

The House Appropriations Committee yesterday accepted the President's economy challenge by slashing $94,492,166 from the independent offices bill and eliminating all funds for two White House agencies.

It was the mightiest swing of the economy ax since the President asked Congress to hold down spending to keep from exceeding the legal debt limit.

The House committee responded with a vigor that in two appropriation bills reported to date sliced nearly $102,000,000 from the President's budget.

The cuts, if applied proportionately to other bills, and ratified by House and Senate, conceivably would obviate the need of the $460,000,000 in special taxes asked by Mr. Roosevelt, one committee spokesman said.

Struck down by the committee were funds for two agencies favored by and operating directly under the President—$1,060,000 for operation of the National Resources Planning Board and $1,055,000 for the Office of Government Reports.

D. C. Building Disallowed

Also disallowed was $4,970,000 intended for commencement of six new public buildings projects in the District—the General Accounting Office, Federal Office Building, Bureau of Economics, West Central Heating plant, State Department annex and funds for acquisition of additional District property.

But the committee recommended $30,250,000 for Federal construction projects outside the District (a $23,545,000 ut below current funds) and allowed funds for completion of construction of the Social Security and Railroad Retirement buildings and the War Department building here already authorized.

"The committee believes that the financial condition of the Treasury does not warrant the launching of a new building program in the District of Columbia at the present time" said the report.

President Serves Notice

Reason given for striking down all funds for the National Resources Planning Board and the Office of Government Reports, pet projects under the White House was: "An investigation of the legislative history of the board (and the Office of Government Reports) fails to disclose any basic law authorizing its existence."

The President indicated at once that he would not lose these two agencies without a fight. At a press conference he predicted that both would be provided for by legislation authorizing their continuance, and appropriations then would be asked in the routine way. Mr. Roosevelt said the committee had informed him House Republicans had planned to strike them from the offices bill on points of order, be-

You'd Better Pay Or Stablemen Will Hold Your Horses

Washington stablemen, just hold your (unclaimed) horses. And they may turn out to be yours for keeps.

Congress may decide it that way. Anyhow, the House yesterday received a bill considering the plight of District stable owners—and garage owners—with unclaimed animals—and cars—on their hands. The bill gives these owners the right to hold said horses, and motor vehicles, for charges against them.

Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee offered the bill which stipulates that proprietors must give notice in writing of their intention to the owner of the horse, or automobile.

Long Takes Lead In Louisiana Voting

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Before the counting of votes, Gov. Earl K. Long (left) jubilantly anticipates a "victory" in the primary race by singing over the radio at New Orleans

By the Associated Press

New Orleans, Jan. 16.—Unofficial and incomplete returns of today's Democratic gubernatorial primary indicated the Louisiana political regime was facing its most serious test since Huey P. Long started hs dictatorship in 1928.

Gov. Earl K. Long, brother of Huey and standard-bearer for the administration, was building up a commanding edge in New Orleans, his stronghold, but Sam Jones, Lake Charles attorney, leading the four "reform" candidates, was adding to his total in slow returns from country parishes, where he was leading.

It appeared probable that a second primary would be necessary February 20. The Long dynasty, in its 12-year-old history, never has found it necessary to go into a runoff, either during Huey's lifetime or after he was shot and killed in September, 1935.

State Senator James A. Noe, of Monroe, as bitter a foe of Earl K. Long as he was a friend of Huey, was running third in the early returns but reports had not started coming in from the "strong" sections of James H. Morrison, Hammond attorney. Vincent Moseley, Opelousa attorney, was a poor fifth.

Returns from 267 of the State's 1,703 precincts, of which 199 precincts were from New Orleans, gave

Police Told To Close in on Killer Drivers

Brown Orders More Attention Be Given To Moving Traffic

Maj. Brown yesterday told the police to concentrate on arresting potential killer-drivers rather than parking law violators.

The police chief issued the order in a three-hour conference with his precinct commander and inspectors, who agreed on a three-point program—education, engineering, enforcement—to reduce the District's traffic death toll, which last year rose to 85.

After an incomplete analysis of the Capital's traffic problems in a letter from Capt. Arthur E. Miller, who is presently studying at Northwestern University's traffic institute, the police officials agreed:

To make a thorough investigation into every fatality of 1939.

To undertake an intensive educational campaign in church and school, in home and place of business, before civic and social organizations. Police, as well as parents and children, will be made traffic safety conscious.

To survey all District precincts for traffic-dangerous conditions and to make recommendations of reform.

To indorse a system of prosecutors and judges trained in traffic problems.

Maj. Brown urged the officers to pay more attention to moving traffic, which causes most of the accidents, and less to "standing" traffic.

He emphasized that he was not after an increase in arrests of motorists, but a decrease in acci-

Frank Gannett Enters Race for Presidency

Roosevelt Critic Says Candidacy Is a Call to Duty

By the Associated Press

Rochester, N. Y., Jan. 16.—Frank Gannett, Rochester publisher and long-time critic of President Roosevelt and the New Deal, announced tonight his candidacy for the Republican Presidential nomination.

The 63-year-old publisher told a civic reception in his honor and a radio audience:

"I realize what it means to be a candidate for the Republican nomination for President—what it means in responsibility, in hard work, in sacrifice. Yet it is a call to duty that no citizen can ignore. My answer is yes."

At the same time, Gannett said if his task is "to follow, to fight in the ranks, as I have fought, there you will find me—fighting."

The publisher's candidacy presages a contest for New York State's 92 votes in the Republican National Convention. Thomas E. Dewey, New York County district attorney, several weeks ago announced his candidacy.

Gannett, chairman of the committee to uphold constitutional government, was particularly active against President Roosevelt's Supreme Court reorganization plan and his proposal for administrative reorganization.

The publisher keynoted his address tonight on the "preservation of democracy" and cultivation of "the abundant fruits of private enterprise."

"We can bring back and preserve democracy, along with prosperity,"

FWA Report to Propose U. S. Take Over Cafeteria System

A proposal of the Federal Works Administration legal staff that the Government take over the entire Welfare and Recreational Association, lock, stock and barrel, probably will be placed in the hands of FWA Administrator John M. Carmody within the next few days, The Post learned yesterday.

The recommendation will be made in a report calling for a complete reorganization of the $3,000,000 corporation that operates cafeterias and other concessions in more than a score of Federal buildings and Washington parks. It involves removing control of the association's assets and operations from its self-perpetuating, independent directing board, and vesting them in the Public Buildings Administration, a branch of the FWA.

The report, made by Carmody's legal staff at his request, is based on the theory that the association is, and has always been, a Government instrumentality; that its large reserves are Federal trust funds; that the association's original charter in 1926 to operate in Federal buildings was invalid, and that its subsequent activities, although carried on in good faith, have been extra-legal.

It was learned that the report suggests that in preference to dissolving the association and setting

Roosevelt Gets Ohio's 52 Delegates

They Will Support His Candidate; Chairman Doubts He'll Run Himself

By the Associated Press

Columbus, Ohio, Jan. 16.—Ohio Democrats, with 52 convention votes, today boarded a third-term band wagon for President Roosevelt.

State Chairman Arthur L. Limbach said delegates would go to the Democratic National Convention ready to support renomination of the President or back his selection for a White House successor.

Limbach expressed belief Mr. Roosevelt would decline a third terms and by inference designated Associate Justice William O. Douglas of the United States Supreme Court as the New Deal's Presidential choice.

While nominally pledged to Senator Donahey as a "favorite son" candidate, Limbach predicted the Ohio delegation would cast its 52 votes immediately for Roosevelt if there should be a first ballot swing to the President.

Neither law nor custom binds Ohio delegates to any Presidential candidate.

The delegation will vote as a unit on candidates, but will be free to ballot in any manner on other convention business.

"We do not intend to have another 1932 fiasco," Limbach said, referring to the Chicago convention when the Ohio vote nearly missed being recorded because it was so badly split over supporting President Roosevelt.

Roosevelt Sidesteps

President Roosevelt again yesterday sidestepped questions asked at a press conference as to just what his third term plans were. A reporter called his attention to an article in the United States News, published by David Lawrence, which said the President would announce on January 20 or March 4 that he does not choose to run for a third term.

Mr. Roosevelt laughingly inquired whether the article was copyrighted and whether other papers had picked it up and paid for the privilege. He added that it was slick technique on Lawrence's part—a new way of making money.

Lawrence said later that all those who asked permission to use the story were authorized to do so free of charge.

Farley Comment

New York, Jan. 16 (AP).—Postmaster General Farley was quoted by the New York Herald Tribune today as saying President Roosevelt would not seek a third term unless drafted in a national emergency.

The paper quoted the Democratic National Chairman as making the assertion before a class in American politics at Columbia University yesterday.

He Only Kissed Her Hand—

"No Romance"

Mrs. Roosevelt is "sorry to say" that the report was grossly exaggerated:

Vice President Garner at the White House reception last week did not kiss her. It was only her hand he smacked.

Cactus Jack's way of paying his respects to the First Lady when he and Mrs. Garner broke precedent by attending the White House party for members of Congress was brought up at Mrs. Roosevelt's press conference yesterday.

"Did the Vice President actually kiss you?" some reporter asked.

The First Lady shouted with laughter.

"I'm sorry it isn't true," she said, explaining then it was all hand-kissing—that the Vice President had kissed not only her hand, but the President's as well—because all agreed it was all right for him to leave as early as he pleased.

Mrs. Roosevelt, in another part of the press conference, told re-

G-Men Trail Four in $6,665 Bank Holdup

Bandits Put Pastor, 2 Clerks in Vault, Flee in Stolen Car

Special Dispatch to The Post

Walkersville, Md., Jan. 16.—An interstate dragnet was spread tonight, with G-men in charge, for four armed bandits who robbed the Walkersville Bank of $6,665 this morning and escaped, with two employes and a clergyman left behind in a vault.

Federal agents and police of Washington, Maryland and Pennsylvania broadcast lookouts for the stolen auto in which the quartet made its getaway after "pretty well cleaning out" the bank in this little town 5 miles north of Frederick.

Those who faced the bandits' guns were the Rev. John W. Fisher, pastor of the Walkersville United Brethren Church and the day's first customer, who had come in to make a $7 deposit; Percy Claggett, cashier, and Miss Freda Kintz, bookkeeper. All were intimidated but none injured.

Before the end of the day the holdup loss had been made good by a casualty company.

It was about 9:15 a. m. when the bandit car, stolen in Towson, Md.,

Doughton, 30 Years in House, To Retire at End of Term

Ways and Means Chairman Since 1933 To Take Life Easier

ROBERT S. DOUGHTON

Representative Doughton (Democrat), of North Carolina, pilot of the powerful House Ways and Means Committee throughout the New Deal era, announced in effect yesterday that he did not choose to run in 1940.

He revealed that he would bring 30 years of service in the House to a close by retiring at the expiration of his present term January 2, 1941.

Informed of Doughton's announcement, President Roosevelt said at his press conference that he would be very sorry if the 76-year-old Congressional veteran went through with his avowed intention. He is of great value to the Congress, the President commented.

Representative Cullen (Democrat), of New York, if reelected this year will be in line for chairmanship of the Ways and Means Committee as a result of Doughton's retirement. Cullen is leader of the Brooklyn delegation

"Some months ago," Doughton said, "I decided that I would not seek reelection. Taking this step is particularly painful to me because of the veritable deluge of requests I have recently received urging me to seek reelection.

"Whether my official activities during these 30 years have earned for me a needed rest, others must judge. I do feel, however, that I should now take life easier. Moreover, my long-neglected private business badly needs attention."

White House Disowns Fight On Ruhland

Roosevelt Says He Only Wants the Best Man for Job as D. C. Health Officer

President Roosevelt yesterday denied emphatically that he was responsible for the proposal to replace District Health Officer George C. Ruhland with a physician from the Army, Navy or the Public Health Service.

The President told his press conference he favored giving the District Commissioners power to hire the best health officer available, whether he was in private practice, employed by one of the States or in any Federal agency.

With Mr. Roosevelt disavowing any responsibility for the plan, it is expected that the District Commissioners may shift their attitude toward the provision in the Seal organization program, which would force Ruhland's ouster.

Officials Silent

District officials maintained a discreet silence following the President's statement and pointed out that they are prohibited from commenting on local legislation until it is passed upon by the Budget Bureau.

It was considered significant at the District Building, however, that Mr. Roosevelt's remarks included no comment on the services of Dr. Ruhland.

Although the origin of the provision in the revised Seal plan was made more confusing by the President's statement and the silence of District officials, it was indicated that the Commissioners would not press the proposal when hearings begin on Capitol Hill.

Roosevelt Surprised

President Roosevelt was surprised when he was told of reports that pictured him as author of this idea. He said that he never in his life had suggested such a thing.

When he was Governor of New York, Mr. Roosevelt said, he set out to find the best man available to serve as the State's chief health officer. He found him, he said, in Dr. Thomas Parran, now chief of the Public Health Service.

The President said he would give the District Commissioners the same latitude he had as Governor, with authority to hire the best man they could find.

Proposal a Surprise

First indication that a move to remove Dr. Ruhland was underway was contained in a Post story published last Sunday. It was learned then that the proposal to select the District health officer from the Army, Navy or United States Public Health Service had been included in the Seal plan for District reorganization.

The proposal was declared not a part of the original Seal plan, nor was it the outgrowth of last fall's public hearings. Such a project was not discussed at the hearings.

Dr. Ruhland came to the District five years ago to assume his present position. News of the impending ouster for Dr. Ruhland raised protests immediately in civic circles throughout Washington.

Chamberlain Smothers Row Over Hore-Belisha Ouster

By the Associated Press

London, Jan. 16.—Britain's acute war cabinet crisis—the ouster of War Minister Leslie Hore-Belisha—was smothered tonight by Prime Minister Chamberlain.

The setting was the crowded House of Commons, meeting for the first time after the holiday adjournment.

Hore-Belisha, speaking in the suave and careful manner of which he is a past master, made a brief, mild statement in which he avoided any semblance of making an issue of his displacement on January 5.

Chamberlain then handed him a verbal bouquet in a manner which some interpreted as meaning that another big job might yet await Hore-Belisha.

The prime minister declined to give specific reasons for the ouster, denied flatly it was due to pressure from the army, repudiated the suggestion that Hore-Belisha's Jewish race was involved, and said:

"I had been aware of difficulties a... of the very great qualities of my right honorable friend which, in my view, made it desirable that a change should occur.

Arita Urges Result Similar to Effect of Non-Aggression Pact

Tokyo (Wednesday), Jan. 17.—Foreign Minister Arita told the Japanese press today that "we intend to make the strongest possible effort to adjust relations with Russia."

The press quoted Arita as frankly admitting the Russian-German pact of friendship last September had split the anti-Comintern pact.

Senate Stirred Up

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt yesterday urged a "reasonable approach" to the Finnish aid problem through Export-Import Bank extensions of credit for purchase of nonmilitary supplies in the United States.

Identical letters to Vice President Garner and Speaker Bankhead said this would not in any way threaten "involvement" in Europe's quarrels.

Letters Stir Debate

The President left Congress to determine the amount of the loans, which he said could be financed by an increase in the Export-Import Bank's revolving credit fund and by authorizing the RFC to purchase loans and securities from the bank.

His letters set off a sharp round of Senate debate, as Senate George (Democrat), of Georgia, charged the plan would delegate "foreign policy-making" power to the two Federal agencies and redouble pressure for loans to combatants in Europe.

A Senate row over committee jurisdiction followed, as spokesmen for the Senate's Banking and Foreign Relations Committee battled for control of the legislation. A complicated compromise was reached providing dual control, which threatened to slow the progress of any legislation to help Finland.

Then Goes to Other Unit

The Senate Banking Committee, now holding a bill for a $60,000,000 direct Government loan to Finland, with no strings attached, was granted first say on the question. It will meet today to consider the President's letter and the direct loan bill.

Any measure reported by the Banking Committee will be referred then to the Foreign Relations Committee.

Aside from George's demand that Congress "take full responsibility" for any action taken and delegate no foreign loan-making power to Federal agencies, Senate debate on the President's plan was carefully guarded.

Sino-Japanese Issue Raised

Speakers from Majority Leader Barkley down stressed "sympathetic" concern for Finland's plight, but urged caution and reserved commitments on any specific plan. The Banking Committee was reported closely divided on the $60,000,000 direct loan bill, but with a margin believed favoring the President's nonmilitary credit plan.

Two resolutions introduced in the Senate complicated the credit pro-

War Boosts Exports to 10-Year Record

Plane, Oil and Metal Shipments to Allies Account for Rise

By the Associated Press

Large shipments of planes, petroleum and metals to England and France helped boost United States exports in December to $358,000,000—the largest sum for any month in nearly ten years.

The Commerce Department said the total was $71,000,000 more than for November and about $92,000,000 above December, 1938.

Plane exports to Allies alone amounted to $29,000,000 accounting for most of the increase in Anglo-French purchases from $44,176,000 in November to $85,780,000 in December.

Another factor in the December showing was a sudden recovery in cotton exports. Shipments of cotton, which had been so low this year as to cause considerable official worry, increased from $30,288,000 in November to $43,000,000 in December. Italy, Spain, China and India were the principal purchasers of the fiber.

Latin-American countries now buying here some of the things not obtainable in Europe because of the war boosted their purchases about $7,600,000 to $75,405,000. Purchases from Asiatic nations also increased about $15,000,000 to $68,434,000.

One of the few decreases in December exports was in trade with Canada, normally the second best customer of the United States, ranking next to England. Canada reduced its purchases from $48,993,000 in November to $41,085,000 in December, but officials said the drop was due mostly to a seasonal decline in shipments of coal and petroleum.

Another better customer last month was Russia, which bought more ferro-alloys and copper. Blockaded Germany got virtually nothing from the United States.

Representative Flaherty (Democrat), of Massachusetts, urged President Roosevelt yesterday to name Brig. Gen. James J. Meade, of Boston, as Assistant Secretary of Navy. He said Meade's record in the Marine Corps was "impressive" and added that Meade rose from an enlisted man 39 years ago to brigadier general before retiring.

The Gallup Poll

Rising Sentiment for Revising Wagner Act Noted Since House Probe of NLRB

By Dr. George Gallup,
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

Princeton, N. J., Jan. 16.—A majority of American voters expressing an opinion on the Wagner labor act in a Nation-wide Institute survey think the labor law should be revised at this time. Sentiment for revision has increased, the poll results indicate, since the House investigation of the Labor Board began making headlines a month ago.

With some discussion in Congress for amending the controversial Wagner act, the Institute survey finds that less than one-third of voters with an opinion on the act think it should be left unchanged. Of the remainder, who are critical of the act, a few favor outright repeal, while the majority are for revision.

The survey, which began shortly after the House investigation opened, is the first of a series of surveys which will be conducted to measure the trend of sentiment. In this study, as in previous polls on the labor act, the Institute found a relatively high "no opinion" vote. More than half (58 per cent) of persons interviewed said they were either unfamiliar with the act or had not formed any opinion about it.

The issue put to the voters from coast to coast in a national cross-section was:

"Do you think the Wagner labor act should be revised, repealed or left unchanged?"

Those with opinions voted as follows:

Revised	53%
Repealed	18

It is clear that while there is some difference of opinion as to whether the act should be repealed or merely amended, more than two-thirds of the voters with opinions in the survey are not satisfied with the law as it stands.

Previous Institute studies indicate that this attitude has prevailed for some time past. In four studies made between May, 1938, and November, 1939, the combined vote for revision or repeal has outweighed the vote for leaving the act unchanged. During the summer and early autumn of last year, when the war crisis overshadowed discussion of domestic issues, opposition to the act relaxed somewhat, but the vote for leaving the law unchanged has never grown to a majority.

The trend has been as follows:

May, 1938 ...	43%	19%	38%
Nov., 1938 ...	52	18	30
Mar., 1939 ..	48	18	34
Nov., 1939 ...	37	18	45
Today	53	18	29

Especially interesting is the vote by political parties on the controversial labor law. Although the Wagner act was sponsored and passed by a Democratic Congress, the predominant sentiment among Democratic voters with opinions on this legislation is for revision.

Democrats ..	50%	10%	40%
Republicans	58	27	15

Senate Confirms Murphy, Jackson, Biddle and Wirtz

The Senate confirmed yesterday the nomination of Attorney General Frank Murphy to be an associate justice of the Supreme Court. The action was taken on a voice vote.

The chamber then approved the nominations of Solicitor General Robert H. Jackson to be Attorney General, and Judge Francis Biddle to be solicitor general.

Murphy, 46, will take his seat on the high court as President Roosevelt's fifth appointment. He succeeds Justice Pierce Butler.

Biddle, who once served as counsel for a special TVA investigating committee, left the Circuit Court of Appeals bench to accept the Justice Department appointment.

The Senate also confirmed the appointment of Alvin J. Wirtz, Texas lawyer, to be Undersecretary of the Interior.

Charges of Bias Aired at Labor Board Inquiry

Firm to Be Given 'Works,' Examiner Wrote Superior

By John B. Oakes

Charges of partiality on the part of three NLRB trial examiners during various Labor Board hearings were aired yesterday before the Smith committee.

Statements by examiners that a case was "in the bag," that an independent union attorney had told a "lie," that a company was going to be given "the works," were all introduced into yesterday's record in an effort to show a nonjudicial attitude on the part of the trial examiners, whose duty it is to conduct NLRB cases and draft recommendations for the board.

Committee Counsel Edmund M. Toland also produced evidence that one of the examiners in a California case had engaged in an all-day conference with board attorneys while no company representatives were present.

In every instance, the witnesses yesterday denied imputations of unfairness and insisted that the facts showed no improper conduct on their part.

Mapes Davidson, one of three examiners, testified in a hearing involving the Hammond Redwood Co., of Eureka, Calif., he had written to Chief Trial Examiner George O. Pratt (February 12, 1938): "As far as the merits go, if I have my way, this respondent is going to be given . . . the 'works' . . . The situation is damnable and a disgrace to a free country."

In the same letter, Davidson, a 43-year-old lawyer, wrote that "under the surface, this is probably the most vicious case of unfair labor practice now before the board."

In a 1938 case involving the Armour Packing Co., of Omaha, Davidson wrote Pratt (before Armour had presented any testimony) that "the case is in the bag." He subsequently recommended disestablishment of an alleged company union but reinstatement of only 3 of 17 complaining employes.

Martin Raphael, broad-shouldered young Fordham Law School graduate, testified he was trial examiner in the California-Hawaii Sugar Corporation case in 1938. He wrote Pratt that "the case badly needs shoring up, further preparation and more thought."

After his all-day conference with board attorneys and the regional director, the board was urged to postpone the case until it was better prepared; but Raphael insisted to the committee yesterday that his only interest was to save the board "time and money." The case eventually was dismissed over the bitter protest of the C. I. O. union involved.

William Seagle, trial examiner who is now doing "review work" in Washington, was queried most of the morning yesterday in regard to the Stromberg-Carlson case in 1938, during which he served as trial examiner.

Seagle denied that he had called J. Frank Traynor, attorney for the independent union, a liar; but admitter that he had said Traynor had told a lie. Seagle added that Traynor and counsel for the company "did everything possible to bait me."

Woodring and Stark Urge $2,500,000,000 To Bring Up Defense to Safe Minimum

By John G. Norris

Army and Navy chiefs yesterday told Congress that more than $2,500,000,000 is needed to bring American defense forces up to a safe minimum.

Secretary of War Woodring informed the House Military Affairs Committee that "some $300,000,000 worth of critical ordnance items" and other munitions is needed to equip a "protective mobilization force" of 750,000 men.

Admiral Harold R. Stark said it would cost about $2,276,000,000 to build the Navy to the level proposed in legislation now before the House Naval Affairs Committee, which would expand the fleet by 25 per cent.

While neither made reference to a supplementary budget for additional Army and Navy projects this session, many members of Congress are discussing such a possibility, especially if European conditions grow worse in the spring.

May Upset Fiscal Program

Sizable additional appropriations for national defense, it was pointed out, would upset the precarious balance of the Administration's fiscal program, and boost the national debt above the legal limit if cuts were not made elsewhere or additional taxes voted.

Admiral Stark made it plain that the Navy plans to go ahead immediately with building the ships now authorized, plus those in the present bill, if it is approved.

"We can contract for the bulk of it in the next fiscal year," he said.

Woodring made no direct request for the $300,000,000 deficiency in munitions. He told the committee that President Roosevelt's $1,000,000,000 budget for the Army would be a "wise step toward the fulfillment of our objective." It does not, he said, provide for completion of "existing fragments of divisions" or supplementary troops for Army corps, or the $300,000,000 deficiency in weapons and equipment.

Weapons "Most Vital" Need

The War Secretary termed the need for weapons and equipment for the 750,000-man "protective mobilization force" as "the most vital of all." Weapons and equipment for an "initial protective force" of 460,000 men are now largely on hand or available, he said. The latter consists of the Regular Army and National Guard, while the additional men for the larger force would be recruited in case of war.

"Modern war material cannot be improvised, and its availability determines the mobilization of our great strength in man-power—great, but impotent without the necessary complicated armament and equipment," he stated.

Urging greater concentration of the troops to make possible continuous training of large units of the Army, Woodring declared, "in the near future, some Congress is going to be militarily wise enough to concentrate our small Army permanently in some 20 posts instead of over 100 posts."

Hotel Negotiates On Union Contract

Continued negotiations on a union contract for Hamilton Hotel employes was promised yesterday, following a "strike vote" Sunday.

Hotel officials said a conference with the union had been arranged for 2:30 p. m. tomorrow. James McNamara is spokesman for the unions.

End Leniency, Hopkins Tells Marine Board

Mitigation of Fines For Sea Violations Held Peril to Safety

By Alfred Friendly.

Accused of imperilling safety at sea by its lenience toward violators of maritime regulations, and charged with being influenced by "pressure and persuasion" to reduce penalties on ship owners, the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation has been ordered by Secretary Hopkins to "crack down" and insist on strict collection of fines, it was learned yesterday.

The new stringency is expected to affect not only operators of large vessels, but also noncommercial motor boat owners.

The bureau's past policy, it was learned, was the subject of several paragraphs of sharp criticism to have been included in the recently published annual report of the General Accounting Office. For reasons not disclosed, the paragraphs were deleted before publication.

Condemned by Union

The National Maritime Union also has condemned the bureau's leniency, charging an "amazing tendency on the part of the bureau to deal patiently, tenderly, sympathetically and affectionately with ship-owner violators even after they have been found guilty and fines imposed."

Finally, the Attorney General's committee on administrative procedure has prepared a report in which it is declared that vessel operators have learned "that they may violate navigation laws practically with impunity," and that safety at sea is thus imperiled.

The general problem, it was explained, is two-fold. First, the bureau's past policy has been to remit entirely or mitigate in large part the fines applicable for violation of the many safety-at-sea regulations of the bureau, concerning an adequate complement of officers and men, adequate life-saving, fire-fighting and other equipment.

Fines Not Collected

Second, only a small part of the fines actually imposed are able to be collected, largely due to crowded dockets in Federal district courts and lack of time by Federal district attorneys to deal with a large number of relatively small individual amounts.

In the fiscal year 1938, figures show, violations were alleged calling for fines of $463,145. Fines were assessed to the amount of only $44,370, and only $22,595 was collected. In the last fiscal year, total fines incurred were $493,233, but only $75,621 was imposed, and only $17,006 collected.

Hopkins' orders, made informally, were first formulated last spring, it was understood, when violations were allegedly committed by eight oil tanker lines during a strike on the Atlantic Seaboard. Fines of about $90,000 were called for by the statutes. Under labor union pressure, Hopkins ordered that there be no mitigation. The fines are now being contested in court.

More recently, the bureau adopted a policy of offering violators a mitigation of the fine provided it was paid promptly, but with the understanding that should the fine be contested or not paid, suit would be instituted for the full legal amount.

Bureau officers said Hopkins has called for much closer scrutiny of all cases before fines are mitigated or canceled, and a vastly diminished generosity in general.

The Attorney General's committee pointed to the fact that in a "typical month," July, 1939, there were 31 violations of motor boat regulations, carrying statutory fines of $67,059. These were remitted, however, to a mere $1,201. In the next month, $69,000 of motor boat fines were reduced to $1,040, and in September, $58,000 of fines were cut to $910.

Riveter on Morgantown Bridge Killed by Plunge Into Potomac

Scaffold Slips, Hurling Forest Glen Man Against Wood Piling and Into River; Workmen Recover His Body

Clyde Beard, 45-year-old iron worker, was injured fatally yesterday when he plunged 15 feet into the Potomac as a scaffolding on the new Morgantown (Md) bridge project gave way.

Beard, who lives at 1807 Capitol View avenue, Forest Glen, Md., was working on a floating caisson used in underwater foundation work in the river off Popes Creek when one of the iron scaffold braces slipped from place. Beard struck his head against a wooden piling from which he caromed into the Potomac.

He was pulled unconscious from the water by fellow workers, but died on the way to Physicians Memorial Hospital at La Plata. Physicians said head injuries caused his death.

Beard, who went to work as a riveter for the Federal Erection Co., constructors of the Morgantown span, about a month ago, was a veteran iron worker. He had worked on various bridge projects throughout the country, including the Tri-Borough and Washington bridges in New York.

A resident of Forest Glen for the last year and a half, he is survived by a wife, Mrs. Clara Beard, and three daughters, Ruby Mae and June Beard, and Mrs. Regina Kiesling, of Baltimore. He also leaves two sisters of this city, Mrs. Mabel Stuermann and Miss Edith Beard.

Translator Freed on Bail In Threat Case

Wife of Pianist Testifies He Said He Would Choke Her

Anton Angelo, translator at the Smithsonian Institution, was at liberty under $300 bail last night and Police Judge Hobart Newman had under advisement testimony that he threatened Mrs. Basil Toutorsky, wife of the well-known pianist and music instructor.

This was the outcome of a warrant in which Mrs. Toutorsky charged that Angelo stated he "was going to choke her." He denied the charge and told the court: "I have never threatened anybody in my life."

Angelo was arrested Monday at his residence in the 1900 block Sixteenth street northwest, a few doors from the Toutorsky home. She swore in the warrant that he threatened her because she objected to attention he paid her sister, Miss Ena Howard.

Says Letters Threatened Her

Mrs. Toutorsky testified yesterday that Angelo fell in love with Miss Howard and apparently blamed her because Miss Howard would not see him. She added that she (Mrs. Toutorsky) had received threatening letters and that January 5, Angelo approached her while she was leaving her apartment.

"He was unsteady on his feet because of illness," she testified. "He said to me, 'When I get better, I am going to choke you.'"

Prof. Toutorsky took the stand and told the court that Angelo, a music pupil of his, stated at one time, "Just wait till I get well."

"I never threatened anyone in my life. Mrs. Toutorsky's sister posed as a girl of 22. I found out later that she is 32. I don't like women who lie, and that's why I was angry."

The defendant explained to the court he believed the trouble hinged on the fact that the Toutorskys are trying to stop him from writing to Miss Howard's parents. At this time the defense attorney revealed that Angelo felt keenly about Miss Howard's going out without a chaperone.

The court heard Miss Howard was now in Vancouver, British Columbia.

James Cox's Leg Broken on Visit With Colleague to Canal From Which He Pulled Youth Who Had Fallen Through Ice

A visit to the scene of his rescue of a 12-year-old boy from an ice hole in the C. & O. Canal sent Fireman James M. Cox to Georgetown Hospital with a broken leg yesterday. He was struck by an auto in the 5300 block of Canal street northwest.

The 42-year-old member of No. 29 Engine Company had returned with a fellow fireman, Private Carl Davis, "to see if we'd make the rescue the same way," he said. Don M. Custard was the boy pulled from the Canal Monday by Cox, who fell through himself in the rescue.

Cox said he and Davis had returned to their parked autos when he saw an auto coming toward him. He climbed onto the running board of Davis' car, and attempting to clamber onto the hood to avoid being struck. Besides a fractured bone between knee and ankle, he suffered cuts on both feet.

Operator of the car striking him, according to police, was George W. Brooks, of East Falls Church, Va. There were no charges against him, police said.

After treatment at Georgetown, where 12-year-old Don also was taken after his wetting, Cox was returned to his home at 5814 Sherrier place northwest. He expects to have about 30 days of convalescence at home with his wife, and three children, John, 13; Alice, 11, and Jean, 9.

Argentine Art Exhibit Opens At Richmond

R. Walton Moore And Envoy Emphasize Close Cultural Ties

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., Jan. 16.—A new link in President Roosevelt's good neighbor policy was forged tonight at a preview of the first comprehensive exhibition of Argentine art in the United States.

Spokesmen for this country and the South American republic hailed cultural relations between the two nations in addresses broadcast from the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts.

Dr. Felipe A. Espil, Argentine Ambassador, cited existence of "a permanent feeling of friendship . . . which governs and always will govern the mutual relations between our two countries."

R. Walton Moore, counselor for the State Department, described the exhibit as "tangible evidence of the keen interest which has been awakened among our people in the thought and spirit of a great South American republic."

Gov. Price of Virginia declared that Pan Americanism today, "properly viewed, is a process of thought and a code of procedure tending to bind the American republics in closer social and cultural as well as economic bonds."

Other speakers included Willy Klappenbach, deputy commissioner general of Argentina; Robert Woods Bliss, president of the American Federation of Arts, and Blythe W. Branch, president of the Virginia Museum.

The exhibit, including the works of 82 Argentine artists, shows 104 paintings, 44 sculptures and 89 prints. Bliss announced that the outstanding paintings and sculptures of the exhibition subsequently would be circulated by the American Federation of Arts in various parts of this country.

Prior to the reception and preview at the museum a buffet supper was given at the Commonwealth Club in honor of Ambassador and Senora Espil, Gov. and Mrs. Price and Moore.

Ambassador Espil said the influence of a number of Virginians, George Washington, Patrick Henry, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, John Marshall and George Mason, had extended beyond the frontiers of the United States.

District Backs 2 Income Tax Installments

Speedy Action by Congress to Be Asked On Division Bill

Washington taxpayers will be permitted to pay their income levies in two installments if a bill ordered yesterday by the District Commissioners is passed promptly.

The first payment will be on March 15, as provided in the present income tax law, and the second payment on September 15, with no additional penalties. The law now calls for lump payment of the tax on March 15.

Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal was instructed to speed the bill so that action could be taken by Congress before March 15. The divided payments had been suggested by local merchants, who said the income levy should be placed on the same basis as other District taxes.

The bill also will provide for the Commissioners to draw on the Treasury for funds which would have been credited to the District had the entire tax been paid on March 15.

Tax Assessor Edward Dent said payments are being accepted now.

Landon Calls Roosevelt a Fiscal Phoney

President Flouted Legal Debt Limit, Kansan Declares

By the Associated Press

Baldwin, Kans., Jan. 16.—Alf M. Landon said tonight "President Roosevelt has evaded the statutory debt limit by phoney bookkeeping and use of emergency powers granted him to use the borrowing facilities of the numerous Federal corporations."

In an address prepared for the Young Republican Club of Baker University, Landon asserted the Administration's financial policies have led the Nation into a "precarious fiscal situation."

In addition to the visible debt of $41,942,000,000, the former governor said, guaranteed obligations of the Government totaled $5,621,000,000 on December 31, raising indebtedness against the people to $47,563,000,000 or $2,563,000,000 above the statutory limit.

The President's budget sent to Congress last week was "the trickiest of any he has yet submitted," Landon declared, adding:

"He simply figured out a way to avoid the appearance of too much deficit, then passed the buck to Congress . . . He used $400,000,000 of new taxes just as if he already had it and knowing full well that Congress would hesitate a long time before saddling any additional taxes on the country . . ."

FWA Lawyers Propose U. S. Run Cafeterias

Welfare, Recreational Association Would Be Taken Over in Entirety

up a new operating agency, the association continue its operating functions, but only after it has declared itself willing to redefine its powers, admit that it is an agency of the Government, and provide for its directing board to be chosen by the interested Federal agencies, namely, the Public Buildings Administration and the establishments in which cafeterias are located.

Other significant recommendations in the report, according to The Post's information, were:

Consumers—Federal employes who eat in the cafeterias and lunch rooms—should be given participation in directing the association's affairs.

The annual "rent" paid by the association to the U. S. Treasury for use of cafeteria space—set at one-half of the association's annual profits and amounting to about $55,000 a year—be discontinued, on the assumption that in the future this Government space would be occupied by a Governmental, rather than a private, instrumentality. The savings should be returned to the consumer in the form of improvements and lower prices.

Present contracts of the association to pay welfare agencies in the individual agencies where the association operates should be canceled as invalid.

To continue supplying the charitable agencies with funds, however, a provision should be made for "voluntary donations" by employes using the cafeterias. For example, the employe might be asked to pay 1 cent per tray of food costing 25 cents or more, but would not be required to if he objected. Under this plan, it was estimated, double the amount of charitable funds now collected, about $30,000 annually, would be raised.

Past payments by the association to the individual welfare agencies were unauthorized, the report will declare. However, there will be no recommendation that attempts be made to recover these sums, totaling many thousands of dollars.

The association's 700 employes should not be considered as Government workers, but should, nevertheless, be entitled to wages comparable with Federal employes, and should be allowed the right of collective bargaining and signed agreements. It was believed that Carmody's attorneys would not ask for a cancellation of the association's present contract with the C. I. O. Cafeteria Employes Union, containing a controversial and unique check-off provision.

The association should withdraw from operation of concessions in Washington parks not under the direction of the Public Buildings Administration. These concessions, such as the Hains Point Tea House, the Washington Tourist Camp, Anacostia golf links, Pierce Mill and others, have been, on the whole, losing ventures, costing the association more than $100,000 in the last six years. The deficit has been met by the profitable operation of the cafeterias.

Under earlier plans the recommendations were not to be made until Carmody had received another report, on audit and legal phases of the association, prepared by the General Accounting Office. This latter report is completed, it was learned, but its transmission has been delayed by Comptroller General Brown's illness and by a request by the association's directors for a decision on the check-off clause of its contract.

Carmody's lawyers, knowing the general contents of the GAO report, have decided to make their own report to the FWA administrator within the week, regardless of whether the GAO document had been sent to Carmody by that time, it was learned.

The GAO report, it was learned reliably, takes a very sharp tone, holding the association to be extralegal in its entirety, and citing a list of unauthorized transactions. The GAO attorneys, like those of the FWA, hold that the association is a Government affair.

The GAO, however, is believed to maintain that all contracts made by the association are invalid, including that signed with its union employes last November, after three months of negotiations and on the eve of a threatened strike.

The FWA report, however, is said to hold that the association's arrangements have a certain recognition and sanction by subsequent acts of Congress and rulings of past Comptrollers General, and does not take the view that the labor contract is void.

This contract was the instrument which led to the FWA report, it was learned. Carmody's interest in the status of the association was aroused when he sought to mediate the labor dispute last fall. After some investigation, he ordered that a complete report be made. Meantime, he urged the association's directors to sign the contract, reportedly on command of President Roosevelt, lest a strike develop and Federal buildings be picketed.

FWA officials said the tone of their report was generally friendly to the association, and no punitive measures were planned. On the contrary, they said, every effort would be made to have the association staff continue its present physical operation of cafeterias and concessions.

Violence Sweeps Louisiana Voting in Governor's Race

Long 54,630, Jones 29,200, Noe 22,745, Morrison 5,619 and Moseley 857.

Long, receiving returns in the executive mansion in Baton Rouge, said, "It looks like a runaway for my entire ticket."

Jones said, "Based upon the present returns I am confident I will be elected next Governor of Louisiana."

Noe said he felt "perfectly satisfied with results so far."

Violence, arrests and reports of voting irregularities marked today's voting, the most important in Louisiana since Huey's dictatorship.

"The 'reform' candidates, through a rough-and-tumble campaign pledged an end to "dictatorship, graft and corruption," and centered their attacks on the many scandals unearthed by Federal agents since now-indicted Richard W. Leche resigned the Governorship last June and Lieut. Gov. Long stepped in.

Long denied all knowledge of or part in the proven or alleged graft and corruption which touched many former aids of "Kingfish" Huey. He promised reforms of his own, sought to tie the "big business" tag to his opponents and, above all, appealed to the State's 600,000 electors to preserve the Huey Long kind of rule.

The candidate chosen today, or in a runoff February 20 if none gains a majority today, will be inaugurated in May and hold office four years. He cannot succeed himself.

Stormy "Jimmy" Noe was the central figure in three of the most important altercations that marked voting here. Noe, as friendly to

JAMES A. NOE

Huey P. Long as he is bitter against Earl K. Long, knocked down one man who swung on him, and shortly afterward got himself arrested in another disturbance. Later he was involved in a free-for-all fight.

His aids took a knife from the man Noe felled in one punch with the powerful arms he developed as an oil field worker years ago. His arrest came when he photographed an alleged election irregularity—a balcony above polling booths that gave watchers sight of how voters marked their ballots.

he told the more than 1,300 who attended the reception and dinner. "New Dealers do not believe in private enterprise. The only way to stop them is to get rid of them.

"Our form of government will be menaced until the New Deal and its theorists are cleaned out, root and branch.

"But rooting them out is not enough. We must plant again and cultivate the abundant fruits of private enterprise.

"If the New Deal had gone, unbridled, down the road President Roosevelt started us on three years ago, we should have nothing left today but the empty form of constitutional democracy.

"Because I have seen the terrors of dictatorship, and studied the encroachment of tyranny upon the liberties of the people in Europe, I long ago pledged myself to do all in my power to protect our country from the same fate."

James W. Wadsworth, Republican Representative from the Thirty-ninth New York Congressional District, in a letter read at the dinner, praised the publisher as "a forthright man" to whom "were I present I would give you assurance in person of my cooperation."

Gannett publishes 19 newspapers in New York, Connecticut, New Jersey and Illinois. He was born in Bristol, N. Y., and was graduated from Cornell University with Phi Beta Kappa honors in 1898. He is a director of the Associated Press and was a founder and president for seven years of the New York State Publishers' Association.

When he completes his present term, he will have served as chairman of Ways and Means for nearly eight years, a record second only to that of Serano Payne, who headed the committee from 1899 to 1909.

Tall, broad-shouldered, bald, Doughton has been in public life since 1903, when he was appointed a member of the North Carolina board of agriculture. The Ninth North Carolina District, before he was first elected to Congress in 1910, went Republican more often than Democratic.

Brown Orders War On Killer Drivers

dents, especially fatal mishaps. Speed and signal offenders, reckless and drunken drivers, the major said, were potential killers, and as such should be given no quarter.

After analysis of conditions in his own precinct, each captain will present the facts to the clergymen of his sector and urge them to take up the safety crusade in the pulpit.

Capt. Miller's observations on District traffic were sent in reply to Maj. Brown's forwarding of the 1939 accident statistics. The letter was read by the major.

Miller noted that 66 of the 85 traffic fatalities were pedestrians. Yet, Miller pointed out, "we did not have a single successful prosecution in court for any of the deaths," although the drivers are liable to charges of manslaughter or negligent homicide.

"Whether this condition is an indictment, or a reflection, on us, the prosecutors, the judges, or the juries, I am unable to say," the letter read. "But I do know that is a bad record and apparently there is laxity and inefficiency somewhere."

He suggested assistant district attorneys attend all traffic inquests and to press charges, if they believe them necessary, whether or not the defendants are freed by the coroner's jury. He recommended that the prosecutors and judges both be trained in traffic problems. "The courts seem to be getting in a 'vein' that makes it more difficult to convict every day," Miller averred.

Capt. Miller said any law to prohibit pedestrians from crossing the street in the middle of the block could not be enforced."

years, is one of the immediate goals of the new government.

The foreign minister called attention, however, to the fact the anti-Comintern pact has not been abrogated formally and then restated a point which leading Japanese conservatives say Japan is unable to avoid.

"There are inseparable ties binding Japan, Germany and Italy together as the 'have-not' nations," he said.

The new foreign minister was quoted yesterday as saying he expected Japan's relations with Germany and Italy to be "further deepened."

Arita sought to reconcile his policy-rapprochment with Russia and continued friendship with Germany and Italy—with the known pro-American sympathies of Premier Yonai.

He said he intends to invite United States Ambassador Grew to a conference "within three or four days" to continue negotiations for some working agreeent to replace the trade and navigation pact which expires January 26.

Committee Cuts $94,492,166 From Independent Offices Bill

cause there was no substantive law legalizing their continuance.

In the House, Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, served notice that their fight to eliminate such agencies on points of order was not over. Dirksen said he would raise a point of order against $25,040 for the Council of Personnel Administration. The committee already has slashed $24,960 from budget estimates for the council, disallowing new funds for fostering "good personnel practices throughout the Government service."

The $95,492,000 total slash in the bill by the full committee more than doubled previous subcommittee cuts of $43,492,000. By overwhelming votes the full committee cut $51,000,000 deeper, and reported to the House only $1,100,212,307 for all independent offices, against $1,194,704,473 recommended in the budget.

Sharpest single slash in the bill was $75,000,000 trimmed from the Maritime Commission's estimate of $200,000,000 for its ship construction fund. But the committee approved an increase of $150,000,000 in the commission's contract authorization, which would bring the agency's total contract power to $595,000,000. This the commission could spend in advance of appropriations.

But Representative Woodrum (Democrat), of Virginia, economy bloc leader and manager of the bill, denied the maritime cuts constituted only "temporary" savings. The committee said that "inevitable delays in a program of this character (10-year program for building of 50 ships each year) will permit the commission to operate during the fiscal year 1941 without being seriously hampered. A fight to restore at least part of the cut was expected on the floor.

New funds asked by the President for improved personnel supervision, management and promotions were denied all along the line. The Civil Service Commission's estimates suffered a $295,896 reduction, but was still $750,000 above its 1940 appropriation. The committee said it believed the increase should be used by the commission to promote a "maximum of service" in the departments, particularly in execution of the national defense program. It said the commission should "assist in the prevention of sabotage by disloyal persons" by investigating, prior to appointment, applicants for positions in Navy yards and arsenals.

McNutt Woos Business

Boston, Jan. 16 (AP).—Paul V. McNutt put in an apparent bid for the backing of business interests today as he concluded his second recent New England visit in behalf of the Democratic Presidential nomination—always provided President Roosevelt does not seek a third term.

The Federal Security administrator returned to Washington tonight after lauding the "principle of private enterprise and the power of individual initiative."

Before the Boston Chamber of Commerce, the silver-haired candidate suggested that Government could aid business by serving as a "clearing house" for business plans, and by detecting "the most promising areas for investment and expansion."

He said an unbalanced budget was "inevitable" during the past few years, but "will not be necessary for long," and added that when the national income approximates $90,000,000,000, "the problem of unemployment will be negligible."

Finns Chase Russians Back Across Border

Outposts Established On Soviet Soil North Of Lake Ladoga

By Thomas F. Hawkins
Associated Press Staff Writer

With the Central Finnish Forces In Russia, Jan. 16.—Finland's ski troops have forced the Russian army on this front to a line five to ten miles inside Russia, and have established outposts on Soviet soil.

The new line here is opposite Lieksa, 90 miles north of Lake Ladoga.

With two other American correspondents, I crossed into Russia with a Finnish patrol this afternoon. An hour earlier the Finnish ski runners had put to flight a Soviet patrol of 60 men.

The Lieksa Russian front really is a series of outposts to guard two roads from the border, one north, the other south of Lieksa, 45 miles apart.

Barbed Wire Laces Trees

Trees have been felled in a criss-cross, jigsaw fashion and barbed wire strung helter skelter in the woods. One large section has been cleared of trees to facilitate artillery fire. The tree trunks form a barrier to Soviet tanks.

Such are the main fortifications constructed in the last month to guard against a repitition of the Russian invasion of November 30, which caught the Finns here by surprise.

Few Finnish troops were on hand then, the commanding colonel here said, since there had been an agreement on a demilitarized zone 30 miles on either side of the frontier.

The area now, however, is guarded by strong detachments, with artillery and daily increasing fortifications.

400 Russians Scattered

With the Finnish Army in Lapland, Jan. 16 (AP).—Four hundred Russian soldiers, urged on by fiery pep talks from their Communist commissars, attempted vainly to smash an opening through Finnish lines in the Salla sector today and left their dead and wounded to freeze.

Shortly before midnight the Finns heard loud voices of the commissars through the frozen silence, attempting to stir the frostbitten soldiers to battle pitch.

Under cover of heavy artillery fire, the Russians attacked, some of them yelling "Urraa! Urraa! in response to the spirited sendoff of the political commissars who remained behind at the time.

The extreme cold forced the Russians to advance with their arms folded on their chests and hands tucked into sleeves. Their guns were left strapped across their backs until they were close enough to shoot effectively.

Finnish machine guns withheld their fire until the Russians were near enough to be mowed down without waste of ammunition. Then the Finns closed dwon on their triggers—and after a few minutes those of the enemy who had not fallen were scattered and retreating. The number of dead was not determined.

Air Raids Ignore 51 Below

By the Associated Press

Helsinki, Jan. 16.—Russian warplanes again struck at Finland today in 51-degree below zero cold and Finns reported dispersing two Soviet companies in fighting near Salla.

The worst cold wave in 25 years caused intense suffering, particularly in smaller villages where bombs demolished homes, leaving inhabitants without shelter.

Soviet planes were reported to have blown the village of Ekenas, on the southwest tip of Finland, to pieces yesterday. Half of the 700 homes were said to have been destroyed.

Hango, 75 miles southwest of Helsinki, was raided twice today. Damage and casualties were not determined.

Karelian Attack Repulsed

The Finnish communique reported a Russian attack at Taipale on the Karelian Isthmus was "repelled with heavy losses."

Finnish authorities said that between 70 and 80 Red lanes took part in yesterday's raid on a half dozen Finnish cities.

The communique declared no lives were lost, but private sources asserted loss of life had been heavy. A traveler from Turko said a bomb had dropped on an air raid shelter and killed 15 persons. Three were reported killed and four wounded at Viipuri.

The Finns reported their fighting planes and antiaircraft batteries downed four enemy machines.

Rome, Jan. 16.—A Swedish trade mission arrived in Rome today to arrange for the use of Italian ports and for transshipment of goods through Italy, avoiding submarine and mine danger zones.

The arrival served to emphasize what a great stake Italy has in preventing the war from spreading. A radiophone service was inaugurated between Rome and Oslo and Stockholm today.

Italy is now carrying on trade with Holland and Belgium on a scale never known. Dutch ships and airlines going to the East Indies, for instance, now have their termini in Italy, the rest of the journey being made by rail. There is an important Dutch trade delegation here seeking to purchase weapons and war supplies.

Several foreign representatives are ordering things in Italy, with the natural result that Italian heavy industry, textiles and agricultural exports are having a boom.

Low Countries Have 1,000,000 Men, Nazis Told

French Warn Invasion Would Open Way for British Army to Strike

By Ralph E. Heinzen.
United Press Staff Writer.

Paris, Jan. 16.—The French government warned tonight in an official statement that any German attempt to invade Belgium would find 1,000,000 Belgian and Dutch troops fighting alongside the Allies to "hermetically seal" the blockade of Germany on the west.

The foreign office said a German invasion of the low countries would react disastrously upon Germany because Britain would be able to dispose troops immediately from a "formidable continental bridgehead" there and strike at Germany's naval bases in the North Sea.

"The Nazi plan," said the foreign office, "evidently is based on the assumption that German troops would be able to impose a rapid decision . . . but the situation is different.

Nazi Preparations Thorough

"The small nations are not only unwilling to cede but they are equipped for effective resistance. Finland has just proved it. If Belgium, Holland, Sweden or Norway are forced to defend themselves they would furnish the Reich with the same proof."

The statement, asserting that many quarters regarded the week-end alarm in Belgium and Holland as a false alarm, said:

"It must be admitted, however, that the German preparations at this time are much more thorough than they were two months ago."

Despite this word of caution, it seemed evident tension in the low countries was greatly relaxed and that both Holland and Belgium consider their "alerts" to be ended, at least for the time being.

Gen. Duval, writing in the Journal des Debats, said he believed the Germans ultimately would launch a direct assault upon the Maginot Line rather than make diversion through Holland, Belgium or the Balkans.

"The Germans have no choice," he said. "A detour through Scandinavia or the Balks would lead them nowhere from a military point of view and merely delay a decision."

French Chamber Approves Expulsion Of 63 Communist Deputies From Seats

By the Associated Press

Paris, Jan. 16.—Acting on the plea that "he who strikes Hitler must also strike Stalin," the French Chamber of Deputies voted 521 to 2 tonight to remove 63 members and hundreds of municipal officials who had not disavowed the outlawed Communist Party before October 26.

Senate passage Thursday is conceded.

Camille Chautemps, minister for refugees, speaking for the government, declared, "It's a question of striking those who once denounced Hitler as Public Enemy No. 1" but who later "approved the monstrous German-Soviet collusion," resulting in Poland's destruction.

He said the breaking-off of relations between France and Russia was a problem which "will be solved in time."

Twelve of France's 75 former Communists retained their right to sit in the chamber because they resigned or made public declarations disavowing the party's policies before October 26, one month after the party was banned.

Andre Parsal, one of the former Communists, who has been mobilized in France's army, told the chamber, "I will do my duty as a soldier," then voted for his own expulsion from the chamber.

Thirty-six former Communist deputies are in prison. Seventeen, some of whom attended today's session, are mobilized, and ten are in hiding or have escaped.

In addition hundreds have been arrested and ousted from smaller offices throughout the country.

Shortly after the party was outlawed some of the ex-Communists formed a "Workers' and Peasants' Party" in the hope of avoiding the ban.

When 4 of the former Communists signed a letter urging a session of Parliament to discuss peace during Adolf Hitler's October "peace offensive," however, the new party was attacked in the press for "intelligence with the enemy."

Chautemps said military authorities had completed investigation of the 36 Communist former deputies now held in prison. The death penalty may be applied under the penal code, but Chautemps said the punishment would fit the degree of the offense.

Allied-Turkish Pacts Revealed

Paris, Jan. 16.—Details of Anglo-Franco-Turkish economic accords, signed recently, were issued at the foreign ministry today, and indicate three separate loans were made to Turkey.

One for £25,000,000 ($100,000,000) is earmarked for armament. Another loan is for £15,000,000 ($60,000,000) in gold and £2,000,000 sterling ($8,000,000), with the latter sum to be applied to back payments in Anglo-Turkish trade. The third loan for 264,750,000 francs ($12,000,000) will be devoted to clearing back accounts between France and Turkey.

Interest and final payment are in Turkish pounds, and are to be used for Allied purchases of Turkish goods, notably tobacco and dried fruits.

San Carlo Presents 'Rigoletto'

Lucille Meusel's Singing Pleases Audience at National

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Fortune Gallo presents the San Carlo Opera Company in Verdi's "Rigoletto" in the National Theater Tuesday night. The cast:
Rigoletto ..... Ivan Petrov
Gilda ..... Lucille Meusel
Duke of Mantau .. Francis Perulli
Sparafucile ..... Harold Kravitt
Maddalena .... Charlotte Bruno
Monterone ..... Louis de Cesare
Conductor: Carlo Peroni

An excellently sung "Rigoletto" was the San Carlo Opera Company's second offering of the week in the National Theater last evening, and if devotees of the lyric drama had realized how enjoyable the performance would be, there would have been no empty seats on the main floor. Carlo Peroni, at the conductor's stand, imparted to the performance a zest which was the product of faithful observance of the tempi, and the singers followed his beat without deviation. The performance had perfect timing and moved with the emotional pace of the music, now calmly, now swiftly, with the alternations of mood.

Lucillfie Meusel, one of Fortune Gallo's latest discoveries among young American talent, was a Gilda who captivated her auditors before she had reached the "Caro nome" aria, which is the usual point of testing. Her personal charm matched the argentine quality of her voice, which has a dulcet strain in its fresh lyricism. She reminded me very much of Queena Mario in the days of her service with the San Carloans, and it would not greatly surprise me if she should follow Miss Mario's ascent to the Metropolitan.

Miss Meusel has a nicely controlled production of tone, free and fluent, and she phrases with the ease of a good method. Her fioritura agility is without apparent strain and her voice is continuously ingratiating. Her only difficulty was with the high C which was a little pinched and white, but that was a minor flaw in an admirably even range.

Francis Perulli as the Duke of Mantua displayed a tenor voice comparable in sweetness to his soprano colleague. His is a voice in which the dramatic value depends upon the lyric texture, and the moment that he forces it, the tonal quality suffers. Fortunately, he seldom puts that strain upon it, and his singing is for the most part on a well-centered tone. He has a tendency to flat very slightly with that almost imperceptible drop which escapes the average ear. He should correct this lapse, for he is a pleasing artist of commendable traits.

Ivan Petrov carried through the exacting role of Rigoletto with a histronic fervor that made the characterization vivid. He has a supple barytone which is in turn sonorous and lyrically persuasive. He reached his most effective moments in the third act where he was equally moving in the pathetic appeal to the courtiers and in the leonine vow of vengance.

Harold Kravitt and Charlotte Bruno were well paired as Sparafucile and Maddalena. Kravitt's basso has resonance to its lowest depth and richness of tone throughout the gamut. The minor roles were capably filled by Louis de Cesare, Francis Scott, Myra Manning, Francesco Curci and Grace Dickson.

As in the opening performance of "Aida," one is impressed by the solidarity of the company and the smoothness of its function. There is an esprit de corps in the performances which speaks of more than a casual association. Both in the collaboration of the principals and in the efficiency of the choruses one notes a friendly vigilance and a common purpose to make the production integrated and consistent.

'Gone With Wind' Costumes to Be Displayed Here

An exhibit of original costumes worn by leading characters in the film "Gone With the Wind" will go on display at 10 a. m. tomorrow in Lansburgh's Department Store.

Included in the group are a green sprigged muslin dress and huge leghorn hat worn by Vivien Leigh, as Scarlett O'Hara, and a midnight blue dress suit worn by Clark Gable, who plays Rhett Butler.

Each costume is valued at approximately $500. The display will continue through the showing of the film, which opens at Loew's Palace Theater January 26.

Kane Funeral To Be Tomorrow

The funeral of Capt. Francis Kane, 56, U. S. M. C., retired, who died January 12 in Birmingham, will be held in Fort Myer Chapel tomorrow at 2 p. m., followed by interment in Arlington Cemetery.

Capt. Kane, whose home was here, had been called to active duty with the Marines in September and placed in charge of recruiting at Birmingham. Kane was born in Anniston, Ala., and entered the Marine Corps in 1905. He retired four years ago.

Troop Supply Train Wrecked on Russo-Finnish Front

Roosevelt Plan to Aid Finns Stirs Senate Fight

posals. Senator Danaher (Republican), of Connecticut, moved to invoke neutrality act provisions in the Finnish-Russian conflict by declaring existence of a state of war. Senator Gillette (Democrat), of Iowa, asked that the neutrality act be invoked in the Sino-Japanese war. In neither case has the President proclaimed the existence of a state of war.

Questioned at a press conference, the President said the neutrality act forbidding loans to belligerents had not been applied to the Russian-Finnish war because it is an undeclared war.

At the Capitol, Chairman Pittman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee said neither the Russian-Finnish war nor the Far-Eastern conflict affect the peace and security of the United States, and the neutrality act is not applicable.

Text of Roosevelt Letter

The President's letter to Garner and Bankhead, read in Senate and House, said:

"Last month when the Republic of Finland paid the regular installment on her debt to the United States, I directed the Secretary of the Treasury to place the money in a separate account pending such action, if any, as the Congress might desire to take with respect to it.

"There is without doubt in the United States a great desire for some action to assist Finland to finance the purchase of agricultural surpluses and manufactured products, not including implements of war. There is at the same time undoubted opposition to the creation of precedents which might lead to large credits to nations in Europe, either belligerents or neutrals. No one desires a return to such a status.

"The facts in regard to Finland are just as fully in the possession of every member of the Congress as they are in the executive branch of the government. There is no hidden information; and the matter of credits to that republic is wholly within the jurisdiction of the Congress.

Other Loans Suggested

"This Government will have and South America. That raises early occasion to consider a number of applications for loans to citizens and small countries abroad, especially in Scandinavia the question for the determination of the Congress as to whether my recommendation made to the Congress some months ago, for enlarging the revolving fund in a relatively small sum, for relatively small loans, should be considered. It goes without saying that if the applications for loans can be acted upon favorably by the Congress, this matter will be kept within the realm of our neutrality laws and our neutrality policies.

"An extension of credit at this time does not in any way constitute or threaten any so-called "involvement" in European wars. That much can be taken for granted.

"It seems to me that the most reasonable approach would be action by the Congress authorizing an increase in the revolving credit fund of the Export-Import Bank and authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to purchase loans and securities from the Export-Import Bank to enable it to finance exportation of agricultural surpluses and manufacturing products, not including implements of war.

"It is wholly within the discretion of the Congress to place a ceiling on the amount of such loans. Whether this legislation should include an additional increase in the revolving credit fund of the Export-Import Bank, in order to provide for additional loans to increase our trade with South and Central America, is also within the discretion of the Congress.

In the House the President's letter was more quietly received. But Representative Hook (Democrat), of Michigan, co-author with Senator Brown (Democrat), of Michigan, of the $60,000,000 direct Finnish loan bill, shouted;

"Let's quit dilly-dallying and say on this floor whether we want to make Finland a loan or not."

House Majority Leader Rayburn replied to a speech by Representative Fish (Republican), of New York, criticizing the President for not making more specific recommendations for Finnish aid. Rayburn said the President's plan would "in no wise involve us in war." If Finland did not need the non-military farm and manufactured products bought with money borrowed here, he said she could trade them with neighboring nations for "other products."

Fish Cites Restriction

It was the contention of Fish and some other speakers that Finland had used less than $1,000,000 of the $10,000,000 credit already set up here because of the nonmilitary restriction, and other loans with the same restrictions would not help the fighting republic.

Finnish diplomats were reported disappointed with the President's proposal.

The Senate tussle was precipitated by Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas, who insisted the question was one of "foreign policy" and should be referred to the Foreign Relations Committee. Chairman Wagner of the Senate Banking Committee, backed by Majority Leader Barkley, maintained his group should preside.

In the midst of this routine argument, Senator George rose to oppose "appropriating another single dollar to Mr. Jesse Jones' RFC or any other agency to loan to foreign countries."

Wants Congress to Control

"Congress should assume full and complete responsibility," he went on. "Let us stop this miserable program of whipping the devil around the stump and letting Jesse Jones fix the foreign policy of this Nation."

Then George declared that despite well-wishes for Finland, a loan to a belligerent is "an unneutral act."

George said restrictions on credit to foreign governments was "the very heart of the neutrality act." Once those restrictions are broken, he declared, the time will come "when the pressure will be doubled and redoubled to break down the restrictions upon credit to France and upon credit to Great Britain."

News of Capital Night Clubs

By Mary Harris.

MADRILLON "GOES WITH THE WIND." Astute Peter Borras of the Madrillon is the town's first night spot exec to plan a fancy hop onto the "Gone With the Wind" bandwagon. . . . Pete has been interviewing gigantic Ethiopians for the last day or two with the idea of hiring one of them to impersonate Pork, the "G. W. T. W." butler and serve the cocktails named after the picture's characters. At last reports he'd found an ebony character about 7 feet tall which means that the cocktails will have to be served via derrick. . . . Singers Adelita Varela and Mary La Marr, also ciggie girl Gracie, will flounce about airily in costumes of the 1860's. . . . There'll be a new girl piano player to play interludes of the favorite melodies of the Boys in Gray.

TUNE IN on WOL tomorrow evening between 9:15 and 9:30. You'll hear a group of the town's smartest night club entertainers giving a big melodic boost to the President's Birthday Ball, Maestro Eddy Brandt and his Metronome Room quartet, Adele Van, of the Lounge Riviera, and Anchor Room's Matt Windsor are on the program . . .

"GRAND HOTEL." Everything and anything always seems to be happening at the Shoreham . . . Publicist Joe Deupree cornered us last night with the assertion that a scientific survey showed that the Blue Room had more mink coats to the square foot than any other night spot in town . . . The staff is still in stitches over Society Writer Peter Carter's exploit last week in being the top half of the unicycle act . . . Mrs. William Harryman Rapley says that such fine dancers as Nitza and Ravel had better get some publicity or else . . . Badmintoners Ken Davidson and Hugh Forgie put on a great show. We prophesy that all the badminton outfits in town will be sold by the end of the week . . .

RECORD DECORATION. The Neptune Room entrance looks like a music store this week. The management has proudly rigged up a display of the recent records made by their star organist, Glen Hardman . . . And Glen will play any of them you like. Be sure to ask him for "China Boy" and "On the Sunny Side of the Street." They're both nifties.

12-YEAR-OLD LOTUS. Tremendous doings will begin at the Lotus next week. For it will be Lotus' twelfth anniversary week . . . There'll be a new Earle Lindsay revue, meaning one of the best floor shows in the business. Manno and Stafford will be held over. Because their dances could be watched with pleasure for 52 weeks of the year . . . Bill Strickland and his orchestra are cooking up a bunch of tricks.

MUSIC BY WIRE. If you said "Ho, hum!" when you heard that special music was being wired into the Rainbow Room and the Troika for interludes, you'd better go round and hear what it's all about . . . These "music by wire" installations are really superb, sound as though orchestras were actually playing in the same room.

AL AND THE PRIME MINISTER. Hi Hat's Al Lewis was climbing up a road in the Canadian Rockies a few seasons ago. He had a girl friend who ran a tea house up the hill. Presently he overtook a sturdy fellow climber. "I know who you are," said Al just like that. "You're Ramsay MacDonald." "You're right, my lad," said the stranger with a big laugh. "I am Ramsay MacDonold." The end of the story is that Al and Ramsay Mac D. and Al's girl friend all had tea and crumpets and conversation together.

ADELE VAN, of Lounge Riviera, who'll sing over WOL tomorrow evening in connection with the President's Birthday Ball benefit, January 30

TABOLID BULLETINS. Arthur Todd writes from Nassau to say he's learning a lot of "calypso" songs to spring in the King Cole Room when he returns . . . Mary Martin's engagement at Del Rio has been extended again. Nice news . . . A New York unit will probably replace Eddie Whitesel's trio at Cafe Caprice when their engagement terminates on January 25.

BAMBOO BOOST. Manager Huey Liang, of Bamboo Gardens, vows that Acrodancer Verne Wilcox is about the smartest performer he's ever had in a floor show. Verne's show-stopper is her impersonation of a gay young blade coming out of a night club at 3 a. m. on New Year's Day.

STAFF DOINGS. The District Bartenders Union, good 'old Local 75, will hold its annual dance in the Press Club auditorium on next Sunday evening. Every pretty waitress in town will probably be there . . . Alfred de Mazzon, the handsome Latin gent, who rejoices in the title of caitre d'maitre of the Carlton Hotel, had a highly festive birthday party the other eve. Maestro Bill McCune hustled up after he'd put Shar-Zad to bed . . . Alex of the Mayfair used to be headwaiter Albert at the old Club Habana. He won't tell us why he changed his name.

RIVER BEND DOINGS. Orchestra Leader George Stein, of River Bend, just dropped in to tell us that there'll be a big "All-Swing Night" at River Bend on Friday. Trick musical arrangements for the party have been concocted by George, Les Mason and Harry Echols . . . Tonight is another "Piggy Party" at River Bend.

LADY NIGHT SPOT OWNERS. Mrs. H. E. McGarvey, owner of the Fat Boy, and Mrs. Mary Inez Stamm, owner of Maryland Club Gardens, are the only leddies who've entered the night spot business in the suburbs. . . . They've both made good handsomely.

STAR ARRANGER. Musicians agree that Bill Downer's 12-man orchestra at the Nightingale is one of the best in this territory. Much of the credit goes not only to Bill, but to Pianist Rod Raffelle, who makes most of the clever arrangements used by the Downerites.

French Sure Power at Sea Will Win War

Navy Cooperating With British Almost As if a Single Fleet

By P. J. Philip

Copyright by New York Times

With the French Fleet, Jan. 15. In a recent statement issued to the press the marine minister, Cesare Campinchi, gave out the bare facts of what the French fleet has done since the war began. They were impressive enough—ten enemy submarines sunk, troops and provisions safely escorted into France in an endless stream of convoys while no enemy ship can pass, and hundreds of thousands of tons of supplies destined for Germany seized, all without the loss of a single French war vessel by enemy action.

Told in that official way it is satisfactory. But these bare statistics tell only a very small part of the story of what the French navy is doing, for they leave out all that is human, and they give only a very small idea of the steady, sure, comprehensive effort that lies behind these results.

What it means is that eventually, and once more, sea power must win. While all has been quiet along the front during these past four months the allied superiority at sea, and it is that superiority on which the French count for a great deal, has been piling steadily higher.

Method Impressive

It is not only Germany that feels this warning policeman's hand on the arm. There is not any neutral who does not have to submit, and there is no European neutral who could now join the cause with Germany, for Germany has nothing to offer against what would be lost at sea.

The method of it all is what is most impressive. Airplanes, escort ships, submarine chasers and cruisers—all work with clocklike regularity. They synchronise with the British in what has become almost a one-fleet movement. Hundreds of miles from the French coast an airplane will pick up a convoy giving and getting information, always watchful, hopeful even that one day—it has already happened—a submarine will be sighted and sunk.

They come and go, these planes, with the regularity of a peacetime mail service, and with almost less attention. There are fast destroyers to shepherd the convoys past dangerous areas. With guns that can range beyond anything carried by the French fleet in the last war, fishing schooners from the banks go fishing, now for mines, ready also for U-boats or anything else that may come along.

Not Enough Fish

There is only one complaint. This fishing has already in these four months become unfruitful. There are so few fish.

But these captains courageous, and their crews, never abandon their hope and vigilance. The Sirocco was outrageously lucky. It got three. But no man in the fleet begrudges the captain and the crew of the Sirocco their luck. Some day it may turn their way and so back out to the long watchful patrol. Glory is just a gamble—duty is different.

Somewhere in the Atlantic the Dunkerque was waiting last month for the pocket battleship Admiral Graf Von Spee. She was even on her way to the rendezvous when the news came in that that "opposite number" had been chased crippled into a neutral port by three British ships. Disappointment, yes—but only momentary. There are still two more German pocket battleships to be dealt with, and probably more building. So the Dunkerque turned with hope to the future.

Two Battleship A-building

Soon she will have two more mates, the Richelieu and the Jean Bart, on the completion of which work is going along fast now that the money has been voted. In other yards other ships are taking form. It is and will be even more a balanced fleet, with ships for every purpose, for attack as well as defense.

Of the spirit of those who man these ships and airplanes, these anecdotes tell the most. The bearded admiral at one port told how the War of 1870 broke out when his father was 34 years old. The last war broke out when he was 34, and now his eldest son, the seventh generation in the navy, is just 34. "It can't go on," he said. "This time must be the last for, at least, two generations."

There was another, a young pilot who had just brought in a huge plane capable of crossing the Atlantic. "When we have cleaned up the sea, we shall clean up the air," he said, "and when we have done that there is not going to be any doubt who are masters of Europe."

Chamberlain Waging Major Offensive Against Inflation

By Raymond Daniell

Copyright by New York Times

London, Jan. 15.—Since the war broke out last September, the people of Great Britain have been living in the style to which they were accustomed. Now, the government has decided the time has come to tell the people that they cannot continue and a major offensive against inflation—a skulking enemy which already has made some headway in this country—has begun.

That is the real meaning of the Mansion House speech by Prime Minister Chamberlain and the address by Chancellor of the Exchequer Sir John Simon at Glasgow.

It is not an easy political task for any government in power to tell its people that, far from a chicken in every pot, they must be content with soup greens, but that is about the theme of the ministerial Chautauqua now under way.

Stripped of political verbiage, what the prime minister and the chancellor of the exchequer are trying to say is that the people of these islands must resign themselves to a drastically lowered standard of living if they are to win the war.

Living on Reserves

Last September, average Britishers adopted an attitude of smug complacency, finding comfort in oratory to the effect that "time is on our side" without realizing that time is a commodity the enemy can use as well. Bombs have not fallen on British cities, the Western Front has been spared a blood bath and at sea and in the air Great Britain has held her own and, to most, it seems that "God is in heaven—all's right with the world."

Meantime as Germany speeds up production and curtails consumption, the people of these islands, dependent upon seaborne commerce for raw materials with which to wage the war, far from reducing private consumption, have been consuming more. This can only mean that since September, the country has been living on reserves or spending its substance.

Living costs have risen nearly 25 per cent. Labor, confronted with the hard fact that wages buy less, is demanding higher pay. Wedded to the theory that in that direction lies inflation, the government is seeking now to convince labor leaders and the masses of this country that it is better for them in the long run to take a share in sacrifices now than submit to the inequitable future inroads that inflation would make upon all.

To Take All Surpluses

The problem before the country is a simple one. It is that it cannot get a quart from a pint jug. The solution is more complicated for it consists not only of convincing the public it should be content with less, but of making it see that, with more to spend, it should buy less. That is why rationing, which already applies to sugar, bacon and butter, will be extended soon to other commodities.

Encouraged by a Pollyanna press, the public's attention has been focused on spectacular victories like that over the Admiral Graf Spee, to the exclusion of consideration of more practical problems, closer home. For instance, economists estimate government expenditure this year will amount to 40 per cent of the national income before the war, or nearly £2,500,000,000.

This means that, through taxation or borrowing, the government is going to take about all the surpluses in goods produced normally for public consumption. Regardless of which method is used, there will be less for the public to consume.

A large part of the expenses of war must be borne by taxation, but an almost equally large percentage must be financed by loans. It is the task of government, therefore, to convince the people that not only should they accept the already crushing burden of taxation but economize to the point where they can lend the government funds from savings, and this in a country where it is estimated that two-thirds of consumption is by those with less than £250 incomes.

More Rationing to Come

Naturally, increased government spending means increased total wages, and it is expected by economists that most of its increment will fall into the hands of those now earning less than £10 weekly. It is felt in government circles that prices must be regulated and consumption limited, if the "vicious" spiral of inflation, to which both Chamberlain and Simon referred, is to be avoided.

A step to this end has been taken already in rationing of butter, bacon and sugar, all of which are imported, and there is every indication that rationing soon will be extended to meat, clothing and other commodities, the price of which might be expected to shoot up in face of a limited supply and an increased demand resulting from increased spending power.

A further argument for rationing is that it tends to regularize demand and to simplify the problem of distribution. Besides, in addition to releasing shipping space and foreign exchange for war materials, it prevents the wealthy from cornering available supplies.

J. M. Keynes, in a recently published article, estimated that increased earnings in the hands of those with less than £10 weekly would amount to £525,000,000 annually. Some fears are expressed that unless a method is found for canalizing most of this into government loans, it was inevitable that inflationary price rises would occur.

However, with income tax at the current record level, and likely to be increased when the April budget is made up, it would seem the most pressing problem is less of how to get the workers to save than that of keeping prices down to where present wage scales are sufficient for the bare existence of the masses.

Summons May Be Served on Soldier

Soldiers whose duty brings them to Washington in peace time are fair game for local process servers, the District Court of Appeals ruled Monday.

The court, in an opinion by Justice Fred M. Vinson, refused to quash a summons served on Sergt. Fred W. Carl, of the regular army. He claimed immunity to service by Washington officers because he came here on military duty, and was regularly stationed at Fort Meade, Md., where Washington officials have no authority.

Justices Harold Stephens and Wiley Rutledge concurred in ordering Carl to defend a damage suit brought against him as a result of an automobile accident.

Poignant Grief Mingles With Superficial Frivolity As Warsaw Dances and Battles Back Toward Normalcy

Copyright by the New York Times

Berlin, Jan. 15.—Among ruins that are still visible on every side three months after the German bombardment, Warsaw is gradually coming to life and again beginning to take on the appearance of a normal city.

The ravages of war have accentuated the strong contrasts between splendor and squalor, between rich and poor that always characterized this capital. Outside the night clubs, where moneyed couples dance from early afternoon to 8 p. m., the closing hour, ruined houses still stand starkly against the sky. The impoverished population forms ragged lines before shops to get food.

This description, furnished by a German traveler who recently returned, gives the impression the city, which is trying to return to normal as quickly as possible, is making every effort to forget the horrors of three months ago.

It is a bizarre picture of suffering and superficial frivolity, tinged always by the aftermath of the terror that reigned in the town when bombs spewed death and destruction for three long weeks. Its people still are stricken with dismay by the suddenness of their fate, trying to put together the splintered pieces of their daily lives and adjust them to the new conditions their German masters have imposed.

The closing hour for all restaurants and amusement places has been set at 8 o'clock in the evening. From early sunset, these winter afternoons, until that hour they are filled with young couples who dance, laugh, talk, sip their drinks as though nothing has happened and their Fatherland were still intact. German officials are not allowed to dance or frequent amusement places, so here the Poles are left to themselves.

"Coming from outside with the picture of shattered houses still before one's eyes, it is hard to believe the sight of dancing couples elegantly dressed," this traveler relates. "This ease with which the Polish character surmounts the transition from death to dance amazes one. Dance floors are crowded with couples, every table filled. The attitude of these people is as untroubled and gay as though they were in hotel halls of St. Moritz or Nice.

"Not three months ago, German bombs dropped on this city, blasting window panes, killing people, obliterating Poland. Today Poland's society is dancing once more with undeniable grace and chic on a parquet floor. The only difference is that the cocktail party has become at the same time the evening ball.

"Warsaw's face is assuming human features once more. In the main streets of the town, in winding alleys the life of a big city is slowly beginning to pulse in normal tempo. People are buying in shops again; traffic moves through the streets but recently repaired.

"But everywhere are warning signs of war. There is no illusion left in this regard."

Almost every street in the city still has shattered houses whose windows show blank interiors and roofless rooms. Rubble and debris have been cleared away, but actual reconstruction has just begun. Many inhabitants still are homeless, living in temporary quarters assigned to them and being fed by German and Polish relief organizations.

German relief agencies, notably the National Socialist welfare organization still is caring for 600 German nationals daily who are passing through Warsaw on their way to the homes they left when the juggernaut of war rolled toward them. Most of them still are without any clothes except what they are wearing and what they picked up in the course of their varied journeys. German officials feed and outfit them and send them home.

In Warsaw a transient camp has been established in a former schoolhouse. It includes a kindergarten for the many small children who accompanied their parents on their long wanderings.

U. S. Volunteers, Young, Tough, Training Under Finn Command

By Walter Kerr

Copyright, 1940, New York Tribune

With American Volunteers in the Finnish Army, Jan. 16 (By Wireless.—Impatiently awaiting the order that will send them against the Red armies in Finland, the vanguard of the American volunteers in the Finnish army is receiving intensive training here on the snow-covered ground.

I saw some of them today. Dressed in new uniforms and equipped with modern rifles and submachine guns, they were obeying Finnish military commands they had learned from blackboard instructions during the past few weeks. The Americans, some from the United States and others from Canada, looked tough enough for the job ahead of them.

During the morning their Finnish commander, Capt. "K." marched them up and down the training field in close order drill. Instead of the familiar commands, "attention," "right dress," "at ease" and "dismissed" the volunteers responded to corresponding Finnish orders, "asento," "ajennus," "lepo" and "poistuka." Before they heard their commander shout "poistuka," they had been given a half hour of ski instruction and a half hour target practice on the rifle range.

The Canadians, who will be brigaded with the other Americans when they are sent to the front, were led by a lieutenant who was an officer in the Canadian army when the Russians invaded Finland. He received a medical discharge and sailed at once to fight for Finland. The men under him are pretty much of a single type. In their thirties and of Finnish descent, they are men who had previous military training and who left jobs and families to fight for something they considered worth while.

Arthur Williams, a painter, who served two enlistments in the United States Army, told me how he happened to enlist.

"I turned on the radio in the morning," he said, "and heard that the Russians had gone into Finland. I went to work and the boss asked me why I did not have on my overalls. I said I was going to Finland. He gave me 25 bucks for the Finnish Relief Fund and I took the next ship."

Klaus Johnson, of New York, a mechanic who served as a private in the United States Army, said: "I figured the Finns needed help. So I tossed up my job at a garage and left."

The youngest volunteer here is Laurance Heideman, of Detroit, who was graduated from the University of Michigan in 1934. His father was born in Finland. He explained:

By a vote of 9 to 1
NU-BLUE SUNOCO

A majority vote like this is almost unanimous, yet it was the verdict of more than fourteen hundred users of extra priced gasolines from Florida to Canada who pretested Nu-Blue Sunoco in their own cars!

Not only made possible by a revolutionary new process but it is also a pure petroleum product

When we say that Nu-Blue Sunoco is made possible by a revolutionary new process, we mean just that.

Our engineers have worked incessantly for years to produce this new miracle of gasoline chemistry. New refineries have been constructed. Millions of dollars have been invested.

Notice its plus power... its gliding, sliding smoothness. Check its knockless performance... its economical mileage... its quick starting.

Stage Play Excelled In Film Transcription

Steinbeck's "Of Mice and Men" Ace Picture; Dorothy Lamour Coming to Birthday Balls; News, Notes and Gossip of the Theater

THE NEW YORK Drama Critics Circle summed the matter up comprehensively and succinctly in its citation, acclaiming John Steinbeck's dramatization of his "Of Mice and Men" the best American play of its season, when it said:

"For its direct force and perception in handling a theme rooted in American life; for its bite into the strict quality of its material; for its refusal to make this study of tragical loneliness and frustration either cheap or sensational and, finally, for its simple, intense and steadily rising effect on the stage."

BELL

Washington realized the accuracy of this summary of "Of Mice and Men's" virtues when it saw the play in the National Theater, interpreted by a cast in which Guy Robertson and Edward Andrews appeared in the roles of George and Lennie, respectively, created on the Broadway stage by Wallace Ford and Broderick Crawford. Capital theatergoers will be privileged to view a film version of the play that far excels the stage version seen here, when Hal Roach's production, starring Burgess Meredith and Lon Chaney, jr., opens on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater on Friday.

No delicate whimsy attuned to the instinctive tastes of feminine patrons, nor yet a subject that may be relied upon to enthrall juvenile audiences, the celluloid "Of Mice and Men" still is so faithful a transcription of the book, and so superior an amplification of the stage play in breadth of scene and dramatic movement, that it must exert a tremendous appeal to thoughtful playgoers who appreciate the screen's willingness, from time to time, to approach topics that are grim, forbidding and tragic and accord them the realistic treatment they deserve. "Of Mice and Men," in its new manifestation, is adult entertainment in the best sense of that term.

This is due no more to the inherent power of the Steinbeck story than to the superb manner in which it has been enacted before the cameras, the integrity of its settings and the fine quality of its photography and direction. To those who have only a memory of the Washington stage performances upon which to form a judgment, the cast of the picture will prove a revelation. Five of the pivotal roles—fresh in mind only an hour or so after yesterday afternoon's preview screening—are portrayed with superlative skill; all are finely done. The five that will leave the most indelible impressions are those depicted by the Messrs. Meredith and Chaney, Roman Bohnen, Bob Steele and Betty Field. Their roles are those of George and the simple-minded giant, Lennie; Candy, the pathetic ranch-hand, whose life has been as barren as a desert; Curly, the jealous husband, and Mae, his provocative and rebellious wife. Of the five, Betty Field—heretofore cast as innocuous little schoolgirl ingenues—presents the most amazing metamorphosis.

Our enthusiasm, at the moment, is pretty high over this one. We shall sleep over it a night or two and then devise something in the way of a review for Saturday a little more particularized than this hurried foreword. The picture, at least, will be worth waiting for.

While their arrival at the cocktail party in their honor in the Variety Club Monday afternoon was a little too late to jibe with this department's early deadlines, we already know "Buzz" Meredith as one of the most amiable and perspicacious of the theater's younger stars. We should have enjoyed meeting Mr. Chaney, especially since he is so unmistakably his father's son. If you will look closely about the eyes, you will observe a striking resemblance. One learns from a reasonably reliable grapevine that both will be back again a little later under distinguished auspices. We shall hope for better luck then. In the meantime, Mr. Meredith's immediate chore is the preparation of the title role in Vinton Freedley's production of "Young Man With a Horn," based on the life—but not a biography—of Bix Beiderbecke. This is the item concerning which Mr. Freedley told us, and we told you, weeks ago, when "Leave It to Me" was at the National and so was its producer, for a brief hour or two one night. His problem then was a suitable leading woman. However that may have come out, Louis Armstrong and Ella Fitzgerald both will be in there pitching with Master Meredith.

The biggest news so far concerning the visiting stars to be in Washington for the President's birthday celebrations on January 30 was broken yesterday by Entertainment Chairman Andrew R. Kelley, who made known to a palpitant press and public that Paramount's major contribution to the gala and pulchritudinous aspects of the occasion will be Dorothy Lamour.

The sloe-eyed and exotic Miss Lamour has just completed her work before the cameras in "The Road to Singapore," and no doubt already has arranged about that matter of the Sunday night broadcasts—probably will tune them in from New York, since she is leaving Hollywood 'way ahead of time and probably will arrive in the Capital several days prior to the opening of the Presidential festivities. Precisely when she will arrive here will be disclosed in due course.

Miss Lamour, who prefers to be called "Dottie"—or so one is told—came up to fame via a New Orleans beauty contest, appearances as vocalist with popular orchestras and that fragmentary garment known as the sarong. As we have suggested before, it will almost inevitably turn out that that "sarong" word in Washington, January being what it is, one suspects it will be supplanted by a mink coat—or maybe sables, chinchilla or unborn plush.

Anyhow, here she comes!

We exercise no sort of surreptitious surveillance over the Executive Mansion, but it nevertheless is pleasant to record the continued inclusion of the theater among the multifarious interests of the most distinguished woman in America, as conveyed to this desk by one of Monday's telegrams from New York: "Just thought you might like to know that Mrs. Roosevelt is seeing Margo in Sidney Kingsley's play, 'The World We Make,' at the Guild Theater tonight. JEAN DALRYMPLE." A week ago, Mrs. Roosevelt enjoyed "Three After Three," at the National. Her presence in the audience always is heartening to those on both sides of the footlights.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Jan. 16 (INS).—I was just pulling the cover off my typewriter when word came that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will put Phyllis Bottome's "The Immortal Storm" in immediate production. Margaret Sullavan, James Stewart, Frank Morgan and Robert Young are the players. You'll see Margaret, of course, as the daughter, Frank Morgan as the father and Jimmie and Bob as the two step-sons.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Frank Borzage and Sidney Franklin, the producer, will not make any compromise with Miss Bottome's novel. They will unfold the story just as it's been written. After all, there is nothing particularly revolutionary abou the Nazi angle. It merely tells the story of family life and of what the Hitler regime did to upset a normal German family. Personally, I felt that "The Immortal Storm" was the very best book written on naziism, for it segmed to be told with more truth and less bitterness than most.

The happiest news I've had since I came home is word direct from Warner Bros. that Jane Wyman is to have the femme lead opposite Edward G. Robinson in "Brother Orchid" and Ronald Reagan the chief romantic interest. The best part Jane ever had, they tell me, and let me say right here this nice sunshiny morning that Jane deserves it. I'd like to see that all of my youngsters get a break for they proved they are good troupers, and Jane has talent. All she and Ronnie need is a chance, and I am grateful that Hal Willis and Jack Warner realize it. If they could have heard the applause they got every time they stepped on the stage they'd know just how Mr. and Mrs. Public and the little publics like these two as motion picture entertainers.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Alice Faye lost 12 pounds in New York. The irony of fate is that now she has to gain it back to play "Lillian Russell," after trying her best for years to reduce; Hedy Lamarr, Gene Markey, Joan Bennett and her bridegroom, Walter Wanger, conversing pleasantly at the Bette Davis tea; David Selznick had his hand severely bitten by a dog and had to have three stiches taken; Arleen Whelan dining with Alex D'Arcy on her first night home. Seated with them were Susan Hayward and Howard Hughes—a happy foursome; Paulette Goddard now has 42 film socialite members of her ski club, which starts operations shortly; Anita Loos and Melchior Lengle have a comedy idea for which Gilbert Miller has spoken. Anita cannot really write the play until her contract with M-G-M expires in March; Sally Eilers and the Jack Warners leave the last of the week for New York where they will spend ten days seeing the shows; Cary Grant has spent over $10,000 to remodel the Santa Monica house he bought from Norma Talmadge, but so far there is no evidence he intends to install a bride there. Norma, by the way, is back from Florida in her Beverly house; saw George Jessel in New York and his hair has turned white.

Susanna Foster, the youngster who sings so well in "Victor Herbert" is in Palm Springs trying to get rid of a bad sore throat; Hal Roach spent his birthday at Arrowhead Springs with Mrs. R. and the Freeman Gosdens; Victor Shapiro, for many years one of Hollywood's best known publicity men, has been appointed public relations director to Ellis Patterson, lieutenant governor. Vic's job, so I hear, will be to assist Patterson in his effort to be United States Senator; James Wong Howe, famous Chinese cameraman, is about to open a Chinese restaurant; the Bing Crosbys celebrating in a big way at the Victor Hugo the victory of their horse, Don Mike, at Santa Anita; Binnie Barnes, who will wed Mike Frankovich the moment he is legally free, was there. Also Miriam Hopkins and Anatole Litvak. They tell me Miriam and Tole have been seeing each other constantly the last few weeks. Must see Miriam and find out what is happening.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

In Hollywood

—With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

When Paulette Goddard and Roz Russell started that free-for-all in "The Women" they started a new twist in pictures—glamour with a punch! Marlene Dietrich made her comeback with a brawl in "Destroy" and now Joan Crawford has her hat in the ring. During a scene from "Strange Cargo" Clark Gable tries to kill Paul Lowry. Joan rushes in to separate them, gets mixed up in the fight and winds up with her clothes in tatters and as pretty a pair of black eyes as you've ever seen. If this female Cagney cycle goes much further I'm going to suggest that the American Legion stadium here book a Friday night card of boxing with Paulette, Roz, Marlene and Joan challenging any other four glamour girls in Hollywood—with proceeds going to the Motion Picture Relief Fund!

HOPPER

Orson Welles has a hobby that keeps his two helpers busy after dark. He spends all his spare moments learning how to throw expensive, imported boomerangs—but he hasn't mastered the art yet so they have to scour the neighborhood every night retrieving the boomerangs from trees, roofs or neighbor's lawns . . . Biggest boomerang, however, is yet to fall. No visitor to Hollywood ever got as much publicity as Welles. Right now he's being glorified in a series of four articles in a national magazine, another has an article in preparation and in all more than a score of fan publications will release photos and paragraphs on this amazing character. Yet he's done nothing more concrete here to deserve this publicity than hypnotize his associates and press into believing he might make good. With all this ballyhoo it's going to be difficult for him to live up to his own opinion of himself . . .

My prediction that "Swiss Family Robinson" was a hit seems to be borne out by the preview cards. One fan liked it because it didn't show anyone "die or drunk;" and Mr. John Detweiler, of Long Beach, where the sneak preview was held, wrote: "I'd like to be cast away on such an island with Ann Sheridan and I kept thinking of that all the time." Which is my idea of clever casting. You get all the benefit of Sheridan's oomph without having to pay her salary!!! Julius Tannen, known as the fastest wit of his day, turned up in New York and a crowd asked, "Where've you been?" "Disappearing in pictures!" snapped back Tannen, who's done nothing but bits on the screen.

If properly cast, Metro has a new star in John Carroll. Good looking, drives a powerful punch and loads of personality. He and Ann Sothern make a swell pair in "Congo Maisie." There's a girl I tip my hat to. She's got what it takes. Intestinal fortitude. So has Carroll.

British Reply To Americas Called Insolent

Nazis Say English Act As if Latin Republics 'Were Their Vassals'

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Jan. 16.—Authorized German sources today called Britain's reply to the Pan American Conference's neutrality zone declaration "arrogant, insolent and naive."

"The British act as though they were masters of American waters and that Latin American states were merely their vassals," Nazi sources said. "The British decidedly have the swellhead."

Rejection Studied

Rio de Janeiro, Jan. 16 (AP).—The Americas' committee on neutrality studied Britain's rejection of the proposed 300-mile-wide safety zone today, but announced no conclusions.

The committee, composed of seven experts representing the 21 American republics, was called to study methods of securing observance of the zone by belligerents.

Some conference circles offered the opinion that Britain's position was not irreconcilable with the viewpoint of the American republics if Germany should agree to respect the zone.

In a note yesterday, Britain said she could not undertake to keep her warships out the broad belt surrounding the Western Hemisphere unless she had assurance it would not become a great refuge for the German navy.

porters she was in favor of "planning families."

"I am not opposed to birth control, "she said, "but I am not imposing my belief on people whose religion is against it."

She added that at one time she had been a subscriber to an organization that maintained birth control clinics in New York.

The purpose and plan of the self-help cooperative in Washington were presented to the conference by Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, newly appointed executive of the exchange, who explained that the project had given 1,265 temporary jobs and 121 permanent jobs for needy persons since it was founded in August, 1937.

Commenting on the self-help plan, Mrs. Roosevelt said: 'It seems to me its value lies in the fact that it preserves people's morale and raises standards of living for lower-income groups."

to save your face!" came from the Labor benches.

However, the leadership of both Labor and Liberal opposition joined softly in the unity chorus at the close of the prime minister's statement, taking the line that inner political squabbles must not be permitted to interfere with the big business of winning the war.

Hore-Belisha's short speech was the customary personal statement expected of retiring ministers. He now sits in Commons merely as a Liberal National (government) member for Devonport, a seat he has occupied since 1923.

He told the members with pride that his reorganization and democratization of the army had been carried out with a "remarkable" degree of agreement with his colleagues, but said the prime minister must be free to make appointments as he sees fit.

Hore-Belisha explained he had not seen fit to accept Chamberlain's offer to make him president of the board of trade because "I could not feel assurance that the consideration which had persuaded the prime minister to make the change (in the war ministry) would allow of my energetic discharge, in the national interest, of the other office."

That was as close as the former war minister came to disclosing why he was asked to leave his post.

Both Chamberlain and Hore-Belisha said there had been no conflict of "policy" involved in the cabinet shake-up. Moreover, Hore-Belisha asserted he was "reluctant to believe" that any pressure for his resignation had come from high-ranking army officers, or, if it had, that Chamberlain would have stood for it.

Scene of Daylight Maryland Bank Robbery

Peaceful Walkersville, Md., was unaware that its bank (right) was about to be robbed of $6,665 yesterday when about 9:15 a. m. a car bearing four men drove up and parked in front of the building. The Rev. John W. Fisher (left, insert) walked in to make a $7 deposit with Cashier Percy Claggett (right, in set). Fifteen minutes later the bandits entered, herded the clergyman, cashier and a bookkeeper into a vault and made away with the cash was first seen parked in front of the bank. Biding their time, to make sure that business would be under way when they entered, the occupants marched in about 15 minutes later.

The Rev. Mr. Fisher had made his deposit and was preparing to leave when he was stopped at the door by the quartet, whose leader announced: "This is a holdup and we are serious." Simultaneously they drew pistols.

To Claggett and Miss Kintz the leader said, "You both behave and you won't get hurt." The minister then was ordered to lie down on the floor near the door while the two employes, arms upraised, were "covered" inside the working cage.

When the cashier insisted he did not have the key to the cage door, one of the men leaped over a railing, opened the door and admitted his confederates. Claggett obeyed an order to swing open the vault's heavy outer door but said he did not have the key to the inner grilled door.

One of the bandits spied a bunch of keys lying on a ledge, fund the right key and opened the inner door himself. The one who apparently was the leader scooped up all currency and change lying in the vault drawers, performing so nervously that he dropped a number of dimes and nickels.

Considerate though nervous, the holdup band yielded to the cashier's plea not to lock the outer vault door after the three victims had been herded inside.

"We'll suffocate if you do," said Claggett.

He, the 22-year-old bookkeeper and the Rev. Mr. Fisher simply had the grillwork door shut on them—not locked—by the departing robbers. Despite a warning not to spread the alarm for several minutes, Claggett dashed out a moment after the getaway and immediately telephoned the Federal Bureau of Investigation in Washington.

He described the leader as being about 6 feet tall, 160 pounds, 40 years old, wearing blue pin striped suit, dark gray hat and glasses. No. 2 was about 5 feet 10, 175 pounds, age about 50, wearing gray cap, overalls, no necktie. The third was 5 feet 5, 140 pounds, 40 years old, with ruddy complexion, dark overcoat, gauze patch over left eye. The fourth was about the same age, height and weight, wearing a new pair of overalls.

"I think all four had their faces made up," Claggett said. "But I am sure I could identify all four."

Apparently the bandits knew that the dairy farmers of the town and surrounding country are in the habit of depositing their receipts in the bank on the 15th or 16th of the month. Although all four seemed nervous, they worked with precision, Claggett asserted.

"I guess they were in the bank for 15 minutes," he said, "and when they left we were pretty well cleaned, except for a little change. They didn't overlook anything."

The bank's only previous holdup was in July, 1919, when two men, later apprehended, got away with $3,217.

Britain Admits 3 Subs Lost In Attempt to Raid Nazi Base

Copyright by New York Times

London, Jan. 16.—Great Britain today added to its growing list of "dead or missing" names of 130 men who went out in three submarines on a "particularly hazardous" mission last week and have not been heard from since.

News of this latest sea adventure was announced by the Admiralty in this brief but damatic communique:

"The Secretary of the Admiralty," it said, "regrets to announce, during last week, His Majesty's submarines, the Seahorse, the Undine, and the Starfish, have failed to return to their base or to report.

"These three vessels had been engaged in particularly hazardous service, and the Admiralty fear they must now be regarded as having been lost."

What the mission was; where they were going and why, in these seven days, they had not radioed to their bases is not known. It is merely confirmed that they headed toward the German naval base at Helgoland, and never were heard from again.

It is presumed they were trying to duplicate the feat of the Ursula, British submarine which dodged German nets and mines, evaded six Nazi Destroyers, December 14, and was reported to have sunk a 6,000-ton German cruiser of the Koeln class in the mouth of the River Elbe.

It is known, however, the three submarines were manned by probably the youngest crews to sail the seas in a British ship.

Admiralty officials quote the German radio as saying some members of the crews of the Starfish and the Undine were rescued, but nothing is known of the fate of the men aboard the Seahorse.

Naval experts are inclined to believe the Undine and the Starfish were crippled by depth charges. Had they struck mines, it is argued, there would have been little chance for the men to reach the surface.

The fact that the German communique did not mention the Seahorse, indicates that submarine either may have been on a separate mission, or have met a more disastrous fate than the others.

Loss of the three submarines was the heaviest blow to the British navy since sinking of the 16,697-ton converted liner Rawalpindi by the German pocket battleship Deutschland with loss of 280 lives.

Common Sense About Constipation

A doctor would tell you that the best thing to do with constipation is get at its cause. That way you don't have to endure it first and try to "cure" it afterward—you can avoid having it.

Chances are you won't have to look far for the cause if you eat the super-refined foods most people do. Most likely you don't get enough "bulk"! And "bulk" doesn't mean a lot of food. It means a kind of food that isn't consumed in the body, but leaves a soft "bulky" mass in the intestines.

If this is what you lack, try crisp crunchy Kellogg's All-Bran for breakfast. It contains just the "bulk" you need.

Eat All-Bran often, drink plenty of water, and "Join the Regulars." Made by Kellogg's in Battle Creek. If your condition is chronic, it is wise to consult a physician.

Economy That Hurts

The House of Representatives is coming to grips with one of its biggest problems very early in the session. From now until the last appropriations bill is enacted the struggle for economy on one hand and headlong spending on the other will continue. It is encouraging to note that at least in the opening rounds the foes of bankruptcy seem to have the upper hand.

The House Appropriations Committee is fully aware of the fact that desirable expenditures must be cut if the dangerous upward trend of the national debt is to be arrested. So it has applied the knife to such useful agencies as the Maritime Commission, the Natural Resources Planning Board and the office of Government Reports. It has delayed urgently needed building projects in the District. Likewise the entire Federal Works Agency was subjected to a trimming below budget estimates.

The Rivers and Harbors Congress is indignant because the President asked for appropriation of only about one-third of the sums which the chief of Army Engineers had reported could be "profitably expended" on flood control and improvement of streams. That proposed cut is denounced as "false economy" which sponsors of the projects will not take "lying down."

There is no end to the amount of money which the Government might "profitably expend" if it were available. But the time has come when the sorry predicament of the Treasury overshadows the desirability of spending borrowed money. On the basis of the 1941 budget, the national debt is estimated at $1,500 per family. It is far more important to arrest the prolonged movement toward bankruptcy than it is to maintain various types of desirable but unessential Federal service.

The Army Engineers have informed Congress that $871,000 could be "profitably expended" on the waterfront of Washington Channel and the Anacostia Parkway. The District is naturally eager to see these projects undertaken. But its hopes will doubtless have to be deferred because of the greater need for a reduction of expenditures to the level of revenues.

Citizens with the best interests of the country at heart must be prepared to see the curtailment of activities in which they are vitally interested. It will not be easy for Congress to return to a sound fiscal policy. Legislators will need public support at every step of the way.

Where It Breaks Down

In its reply to the protest of the 21 American republics against violation of the desired "safety zone," the British government has put its finger on the weak spot in that well-intentioned plan to keep the European conflict at a safe distance from the New World.

There is complete logic in the contention of President Vargas, to the Inter-American neutrality committee now meeting in Brazil, that the Americas have as much right to proclaim a peace zone as the European nations had to proclaim a war zone. The important difference is that the belligerents are more determined than are the neutrals.

The British argument is that acceptance of the Panama plan would work to their disadvantage unless the American nations guarantee that "adoption of the zone proposal would not provide German warships and supply ships with vast sanctuary from which they could emerge to attack Allied and neutral shipping . . ."

In other words, the safety zone proclamation can be made operative only if one of two developments take place. The first would be voluntary acceptance by belligerents of the prohibition against naval activity in the waters of this hemisphere. The other would be the readiness of the 21 American republics to enforce their demands in such a way as to make it extremely risky for the European belligerents to carry on naval operations or commerce-raiding activities on this side of the Atlantic.

The belligerents are not prepared to consent to the establishment of the safety zone. From the German point of view that would be a victory for the Allies, whose ships would be unmolested on this side of the Atlantic. The Allies, on the other hand, are not prepared to consent unless and until Germany does. And the American neutrals are unwilling to enforce the zone plan.

That plan, therefore, remains a wishful hope rather than a realized idea. This situation may change. At Rio, discussion is taking place regarding ways and means of implementing the Panama declaration. And President Vargas voiced what is no doubt the general desire when he declared that: "We shall do whatever we can to keep away from American waters the spectacle of armed clashes and perils to our own sovereignty."

That does not mean, however, that anything is going to be done.

The Ruhland Mystery

Vehement protests against the attempt to oust Health Officer Ruhland are meeting with a very curious silence at the District Building. No charge against Dr. Ruhland has been made. On the contrary, there is a great deal of off-the-record praise from local officials for his efforts to make the Capital a healthier place to live. Yet the mysterious section 209 of the reorganization bill, providing for the health officer's replacement by an official of the United States Public Health Service, is permitted to stand without a word of official explanation.

The reluctance of the Commissioners to speak is not beyond comprehension. Indications are that section 209 is almost as much of a mystery to them as it is to the public. The Commissioners have usually attempted to play fair with the voteless community over which they preside. If there had been among them any real dissatisfaction with the Health Department, they would doubtless have proposed changes in their original bill before submitting it to public hearings a few weeks ago.

If further indication that the move did not originate in the Board of Commissioners is needed, it may be found in the proposal itself. This would transfer the power to appoint a local health officer from the Commissioners to the President of the United States. It is doubtful whether any municipal governing body has ever voluntarily suggested curtailment of its appointing power.

Particularly at a time when the board is trying to bring about a clearer separation of Federal and local powers in the District, this scheme to install a Federal official in a strictly local post fails to make sense. It cannot possibly be explained on grounds of principle. It is patently a device to remove the incumbent health officer for reasons that authors of the scheme wish to keep secret.

Could the United States Public Health Service have inspired the move? In 1938 Dr. Parran's organization made a careful survey of health in the District and gave the Health Department a good deal of credit for the progress it had made in combating disease here. The program of improvements outlined by the Public Health Service experts was largely an extension of projects already initiated by Dr. Ruhland. Aside from these facts, it is impossible to believe that Dr. Parran would intervene in a strictly local issue.

The protests now being heard from civic organizations are ample indication that none of them had anything to do with the ouster provision. Nor can it be supposed that the District Medical Society is behind the scheme. Dr. Ruhland was selected by a committee of leading Washington doctors as the best qualified public health administrator available prior to his appointment by the Commissioners.

Where, then, does responsibility for this outrageous attempt to dismiss a conscientious public servant lie? Yesterday President Roosevelt flatly denied any connection with the proposed Ruhland ouster and said, on the contrary, that he opposes it. This would seem to clear away a suspicion which was beginning to make headway. But it also emphasizes the necessity for a statement from the Commissioners.

Alarm On The Dikes

It may be only coincidence that when Belgium and the Netherlands canceled army leaves, called up their reserves and reinforced their frontier defenses, tensions along their borders with Germany eased. There is a strong possibility, however, that these developments were related.

It is not certain that Germany really intends to invade the Low Countries. Yet because of the advantages that would result from the establishment of German submarine bases in Dutch and Belgian harbors, and the establishment of German air bases much closer to Great Britain than is now possible, Hitler may be tempted to pursue just such a course.

On the other hand, the invasion of Belgium and the Netherlands would not be without real risks for Germany. It would further antagonize neutral opinion. It would open the way to an Allied counter-attack which, if successful, would turn Germany's flank. And it would add another million trained soldiers to the forces opposing the Reich.

It is this latter point which the latest Belgian-Dutch military preparations have again emphasized. During the months since the war-scare of mid-November both countries have worked steadily to build up their defenses. Once again they are demonstrating their readiness to fight if they are attacked. And once again Hitler has held his hand.

But the relief which is felt at The Hague and Brussels over the easing of tensions may prove short-lived. The German press in commenting on the Belgian-Dutch military preparations strikes an ominous note. It suggests that these preparations are designed not for defensive purposes but as a Franco-British attempt "to provoke Germany."

In other words, Belgium and the Netherlands, having done everything humanly possible to preserve their neutrality, are now accused of making themselves potential spearpoints of an Allied attack on the Reich. From this it is only a step, as Poland and Finland know so well, to the contention that these little nations are waging aggressive war against which a peace-loving Germany must reluctantly defend herself.

Dodging The Issue

President Roosevelt's vague and involved proposal for governmental assistance to Finland is unlikely to arouse enthusiasm in any quarter.

On the one hand, it opposes any loan or credit for the purchase of military supplies, which the Finns must have in quantities if they are to maintain their heroic resistance against overwhelming odds. On the other hand, the President's plan contemplates increasing the revolving credit fund of the Export-Import Bank for purposes which certainly cannot be called strictly commercial, and to this there will be justified opposition in Congress.

It would be better from every viewpoint to face the issue squarely. Russia is endeavoring to annihilate the Finnish republic, and is undoubtedly the more determined in that purpose because of the temporary reverses experienced by the Red army. Stalin cannot afford defeat and it is certain that as soon as the weather moderates the Communist attack will be resumed with redoubled savagery and probably with much more efficiency.

This means that Finland stands in desperate and urgent need of war supplies. And, by the same token, it means that this menaced democracy is now a poor credit risk. The story is summarized in the price collapse experienced by Finnish government bonds since the start of the Russian aggression. From a high of 107 last year they plunged to an all-time low of 32 and have just lately staged only a weak and uncertain recovery to 46.

Cold logic says that if the Finnish government cannot get credits with which to defend itself, credits for purchases other than implements of war will be of little or no value. Yet the proposal which the President made to Congress yesterday bars the essential and fundamental assistance and recommends aid of a non-essential and secondary nature. That credits from the Export-Import Bank, for nonmilitary purposes, are nonessential is evidenced by the fact the Finland has not yet taken up $10,000,000 made available through this agency some time ago.

Of course any positive assistance from this Government to Finland would arouse strong Communist, and to a lesser extent Nazi, opposition. If there is any meaning to the "great desire" to assist Finland of which the President speaks, it must be prepared to encounter this sort of condemnation. Such condemnation would, indeed, be proof positive that we are giving the "heroic Finns" support more substantial than well-bred and perfunctory applause.

President Roosevelt, however, has thought it over and has evidently decided not to venture out on any limb for the sake of Finland. Possibly that decision is good politics in this election year. But nobody will call it heroic. Consequently there will be no real objections in Moscow and Berlin to the current recommendations, even though Stalin and Hitler may well pretend to be annoyed in order to intimidate us further.

Congress may decide to follow up the suggestion made by the President yesterday. It won't do Finland any harm. But if help that counts is desired, Senator Brown's bill for an outright loan of $60,000,000 will be given precedence over the much-ado-about-nothing procedure which Mr. Elderman pictures on this page today.

War And The Arts

Charles Angoff in Living Age.

The plight of artists is coming in for serious attention in London, Paris and other Allied capitals. English journals are publishing numerous pleas not to let the concerns of the spirit wither away during a war ostensibly fought to make the world safe for the greatest possible freedom in all realms. The London Spectator points out that architects, musicians, dramatists, scientific research workers, painters, novelists and poets had their earnings almost entirely stopped at the beginning of hostilities, with "depressing and in some cases disastrous results. Literature will no doubt contrive to hold up its head, though it is likely that the best imaginative and critical work will be severely handicapped, and the bookselling trade is threatened with the loss of all its profits."

The country, continues the Spectator, "must not resign itself to a negative attitude to all that is not war," or it will find itself "losing many of the advantages which it is fighting to preserve."

Help For China

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Most dangerous for China is the present moment, in that Japan's war lords have the best chance they have yet found for establishing a puppet government. This, they crave as their salvation, their only chance to dig in, later on to surprise their victim with another, perhaps far more sudden, onslaught.

These war lords know that the ever-optimistic democracies—especially the wishful United States—would quickly fall back into lethargy by any sort of "peace" whatever in the Orient, from which much time would once more be required for any awakening.

The most effective help we can lend China, which needs its solidarity more this hour than ever yet, is to place an embargo upon shipping Japan any stuff whatever which supports a nation in its war. The moral effect of this would be immediate.

It would unite China more than ever, and strengthen its determination to remain free instead of becoming the titanic arm of militarist Japan. The material effect would be to curtail most drastically the destruction of Chinese towns, and Chinese men, women and children.

In Japan's present dependence upon us for war stuff, and our own impregnability, Japan's war lords could only make faces at us—and this they have already been doing for quite a while! For us, a far greater danger lies in the disarming smiles of Japan's statesmen, who know, far better than our best salesmen, how to influence us into signing on the dotted line.

Problem In Arithemetic

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In reply to the letter from Dick Spurrier, who lauds Mr. Harriman and others of great wealth who are capable of putting money into circulation by employment and through charitable contributions, does he not know that this great country of ours is now capable of distributing abundance to all our citizens and that the forward-thinking scientists and engineers (not old-line economists) know that the problem is one of multiplication and not division?

No careful thinker wants to divide the wealth, thereby reducing the individual purchasing power. "Multiply and replenish" is the command—but it cannot be done by our "scarce money" system. That, too, needs to be streamlined, from producer to consumer.

Suggests Sweepstakes

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Again faced with a great pother over taxes and, especially, money to increase our defensive forces, allow me to suggest to the Congress a very simple solution of at least a part of the question.

I suggest a united sweepstakes for defense, to be operated quarterly with a maximum prize of $500,000. All prizes free of income tax, and tickets, divisible into 20 pieces, to cost $20 for the full ticket and to be sold only through postoffice windows. Every cent of profit to be devoted to our defense problems.

This is not a mere gamble for profits. It is, instead, an honest, nonpolitical method of raising money for a very desirable purpose and a bit of relief for all our taxpayers, irked enough, as it is, with paying, paying, paying. Such a law, enacted for the common defense, ought to meet with wide approval.

Traffic Suggestions

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Somewhat in line with your recent series of articles on the obviously poor traffic situation in the District, I should like to offer a series of suggestions for the improvement of the present congested condition.

1. Turn Twelfth street northwest into a one-way street during Saturday afternoon. This street is already one-way for some of its length during the 4-6 p. m. weekday period. On this point no detailed count of automobiles is necessary. One-way during the week the street handles rush-hour flow. Saturday it does not. Why not change?

2. Why re-surface such relatively untraveled streets as the Ellipse and leave such cracked much traveled streets as Fifteenth street northwest unrepaired. I am not advocating the resurfacing of streets but if such work is to be done why not do it where it will do the most good?

3. When resurfacing, I am by this letter asking the Director of Motor Vehicles and Traffic to give any reasons for putting a high crown in the street—for example Sixteenth street northwest and the Ellipse.

They are exaggerated examples of what can be done to make all but the middle of the street unsafe in wet or icy conditions. Such a crown has several consequences. It tends to turn a four-lane boulevard into a two-lane street; less traffic can be handled, and that more dangerously.

4. Pedestrian control should be established. In spite of regulations to that effect there is actually no such control in the District.

5. Correct timing of signals as suggested in The Post, please. Without any trouble I can list many intersections in this city where it is impossible to "make" the signals.

6. Eliminate all unnecessary signs. The placing of traffic signs that are useless and ignored by motorists and police alike is not only a waste of money and a traffic hazard, but obviously contributes to evasion of regulations that are necessary. For example: the use of emergency snow signs on streets that are never scraped.

7. Substitution of a policy of "go" for the present one of "stop." Apparently, at the present time when the Traffic Department is in doubt they prohibit instead of accelerating movement.

Note the red light against a right turn from Twelfth street northwest east on Constitution avenue when Constitution avenue traffic is turning south onto Twelfth street. Note the red light jumble at the southeast corner of the State Building for thru traffic coming around Executive avenue.

Note the delay in the pedestrian control signals that prohibits movement across Thirteenth street at Pennsylvania avenue even when traffic is clear.

8. By my letter of October 31, I suggested that the east side of Twelfth street between Constitution and Pennsylvania avenues northwest could carry more traffic, even with cars parked at the side, than it should ever have to carry. Moreover that block of Twelfth street can carry more vehicles than the rest of the street from there north.

I therefore suggested that parking be permitted in that block on Saturday afternoon. The Director of Vehicles and Traffic replied that the "no parking" was at least as necessary, if not more so, on Saturday afternoon than at other times. I see no basis for this contention, and maintain that it is in error. How could it be more needed on Saturday afternoon?

Fitness For Judicial Office

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A few days ago The Post contained a terrific squawk from Long Island excoriating President Roosevelt because he had the temerity to nominate Murphy for the Supreme Court. The gist of the squawk was that because Murphy was defeated for reelection as Governor of Michigan he, therefore, should have been consigned to political oblivion, to do penance in mental sackcloth and ashes because he was humane enough to avoid the shedding of the blood of American workers. In other words, Murphy should have Hitlerized and Stalinized the American workers who were merely technical violators of the law.

To use the classic language of Al Smith, let us look at the record. The record shows that we had a great President, who had a great amount of avoirdupois and also a great amount of mentality. His name was Taft. In his second race for the Presidency he was ignominously defeated. He was repudiated in 46 of the 48 States.

Despite this repudiation at the polls, Taft was nominated for the job of Chief Justice of the United States by that magnanimous and urbane and kindly gentleman, who was hurried to a premature grave by the Tea Pot Dome scandal. Who would say that Taft was disqualified for the job? Is fitness for judicial office to be determined at the polls?

Let us again look at the record. Charles Evans Hughes was drafted by the Republican Party to make the race against Wilson. He was defeated, thanks to a man named Senator Hiram Johnson. That Hughes is a scholarly and erudite gentleman no one will deny; that he is a great jurist no one will deny.

The great engineer President nominated Hughes for the exalted office of Chief Justice of the United States. Was it wrong to appoint Hughes because he happened to be a defeated candidate for the Presidency?

Wilson nominated as Associate Justice an outstanding lawyer named Brandeis. The hue and cry was raised that Brandeis was a dangerous radical; hence he must not be confirmed by the Senate. Hurricanes of protests were lodged with the Senate committee which was charged with canvassing his qualifications.

To be brief Brandeis was confirmed by the Senate amid a tornado of brickbats. He recently resigned amid an avalanche of fragrant roses.

Hungry Dogs

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A short time ago an article was printed about dogs roaming and howling at night. Now I would like to ask if there is nothing that can be done about owners of dogs allowing them to roam all day scavenging for food in everybody's back yard. Why don't these dog owners feed their dogs so that they will not be hungry enough to leap other people's fences to steal food put out for the birds?

For ten years I have stood these dogs running through our yard and even barking at me in my own yard. At least they could be rounded up by the pound and the owners pay a fine for allowing them to run around the way they do.

I have read and listened to authorities on dogs tell one that a dog to be healthy should be fed only once a day. But, they say nothing of the dogs so fed, running around the rest of the day and night looking for food in everyone's back yard. And it doesn't matter what the breed of the dog, none are above eating garbage if they find it.

I don't let my cats go hungry, and even though they are fed perhaps six or eight times a day or night, there are none healthier. People should not own cats or dogs unless they are willing to feed them enough so they will be satisfied to stay at home. A SUBSCRIBER.

The Post Impressionist

Roy Gardner

Roy Gardner, last of the train robbers, a twentieth century Jesse James, is dead—a suicide at 36. He cashed in his chips, as one reporter wrote, with "malice toward none and with hope of forgiveness in his heart."

In his time, Gardner piled up an awesome record. He began his lurid career as a petty criminal and served a term in San Quentin for highway robbery. That didn't chasten him. In 1920 he staged an $85,000 mail car robbery in San Diego and became a headline figure throughout the Nation. He was captured but soon escaped.

A year later, masked in true desperado fashion, he robbed a Southern Pacific mail train of $175,000. Again he was captured and again he escaped—this time from McNeil Island Penitentiary, amid a hail of bullets that killed one of his partners and wounded another.

These and other feats—including his last job and his final capture—brand Roy Gardner for what he was, a desperate outlaw. And yet it is difficult to catalogue him along with Dillinger, Karpis, "Baby Face" Nelson, and the other later-day mobsters. J. Edgar Hoover, when he set out to strip the glamour from these fellows, called them "rats." And so they were. Somehow, though, Gardner and the word rat don't seem to go together.

He might better be called a wolf—a lone one. He never had a "moll" do his reconnoitering for him. No machine gunners were ever there to pave the way for his escape. He worked alone, and, so far as is known, he never killed a man in his life.

If, as his last letter would indicate, Gardner had been regenerated, the course of his regeneration probably began here in Washington—specifically in St. Elizabeths Hospital.

Gardner came to Washington in October, 1929, about the time that the world was coming to an end in Wall Street. He had been on a 23-day hunger strike in Atlanta Penitentiary, and the warden there concluded that a prisoner who wouldn't eat must be crazy.

Hugh Miller, The Post's photographic editor, remembers Gardner well, and not unfavorably. On the night in January, 1930, that Gardner was being transferred from St. Elizabeths to Leavenworth Penitentiary, Hugh took his camera and his old-fashioned powder flash-gun to the courthouse to get a picture. Two deputy marshals had taken the desperado there to fill out certain papers.

Miller, bearing in mind Gardner's fearful reputation, hid behind a bush. When the outlaw, flanked by deputy marshals, emerged from the courthouse, Miller jumped up and touched off the flash. However, the picture was a failure.

Gardner, instead of trying to kick The Post man's camera to pieces, became solicitous. He got permission from his guards, and then told Miller to go ahead and get "a decent picture."

There are some criminologists who say that the true criminal has facial characteristics that stamp him for what he is. One such is Dr. Carleton Simon, former deputy police commissioner of New York, who likes to back up his contention with a few familiar quotations from the Bible and Shakespeare:

"The Lord set a mark upon Cain."

"There's no art to find the mind's construction in the face."

"Your face, my Thane, is as a book, where men may read strange matters."

But Hugh Miller, thinking back to Gardner the train robber, can't go along with Dr. Simon on that. He recalls that Gardner did not look anything like the popular conception of a criminal. Neither, he recalls, did he talk like one.

Gardner asked the reporters at the courthouse to publish a statement for him. He said:

"Boys, I don't care what you say about me, but give the fellows out at St. Elizabeths a boost. That's all I ask. Dr. John E. Lind and Dr. Ralph E. Gilbert have treated me better than I have ever been treated since I got in trouble. They are swell guys. If there were more people like that in penal institutions there wouldn't be so many criminals."

The wolfishness seemed to have gone out of Gardner. No prison had ever been able to make him penitent, but the two psychiatrists certainly had made him so. His future was to prove it. Had they, by some form of mental therapy, straightened out a criminal twist in his brain, removed that urge that sent him out to rob? If they had, it must be regarded as a momentous chapter in penology.

At any rate, Gardner went on out to Leavenworth Penitentiary, and there became a model prisoner. When he was freed two years ago, he looked up Louis Sonney, the mail car guard who had captured him. They became close friends.

He also delivered a few lectures, his theme being "Crime Doesn't Pay, but the Criminal Does."

Last week, in a San Francisco hotel, he put a "Do Not Disturb" sign on his door. He packed his bags and put a 50-cent tip on each one. He wrote a note to the press, asking that reporters not mention the name of his married daughter and that they let him down "as lightly as possible." Then he put some pellets in a glass, and died.

Communist Morals

BEN GITLOW, the backslid Bolshevik who once had command of the Muscovite conspiracy against the United States, offers interesting testimony regarding the Communist youth movement in a book called "I Confess." Mr. Gitlow may be remembered as the witness who told the Dies Committee about the use of forged American passports by Communist leaders, the counterfeiting of American money by agencies of the Soviet government and the diversion or misappropriation for political purposes of money contributed by generous Americans for the relief of victims of the Russian famine.

As to whether the American Youth Congress has been dominated by the Communists, there is still conflict of belief. In moments of unguarded enthusiasm prominent Communists have jubilantly claimed as much, but Mrs. Roosevelt insists that she has satisfied herself by inquiry that this is not so. It has not been denied, however, that the young Communists tried to seize control or that they are influential in the movement, so Mr. Gitlow's remarks about the Communist youth should interest the noncommunist youth of the country and their parents.

Loose Morals Were Common

"THEY BROKE with their families," he writes of the American youth who were drawn into the Communist movement, "because the family was a bourgeois institution which stood in the way of their Communist activities. Many completely divorced themselves from their parents. It was not unusual for parents to plead with us that we induce their children to show them some kind of consideration."

Mr. Gitlow cites the case of a father who entered the national offices in Chicago and placing an infant on the desk, told the party to take charge of the illegitimate child of his daughter, 16 years old, who had been seduced by one of the party leaders.

"Loose morals were general," he writes. "Party leaders changed their wives sometimes as often as one does an overcoat. The young Communists had but to see what their elders in the party were doing. It was no wonder that they defied all moral codes. If a young girl who joined the Communist youth organization insisted upon maintaining her chastity she was frowned upon as bourgeois by the self-styled revolutionists who had just emerged from knee breeches."

Orgies Among Youth Never Controlled

MANY OF the young Communists considered the giving up of one's chastity as a mark of distinction. Young Communists did not long remain single, but the common-law marriages between them, as a rule, were short-lived. The orgies and debaucheries among the young were spoken about in whispers in the party, never seriously discussed and considered. We felt that the profligate sex relations among the youth were something we could not control and that as long as the youth could be depended upon to serve the interests of the movement it was best to leave the matter alone."

Max Eastman, who wrote an introduction of the book, says the work of the Communist Party in the United States has involved a series of fanatical crimes not only against American law or Americanism but against the party's own principles and ideals. He is one of those who apparently would grant social amnesty to backsliders who participated or acquiesced in abominable offenses against patriotism and decency. He even bespeaks charity or understanding for Gitlow's opponents who, like Gitlow, were moved "in their factional maneuvers and their dirty trickery in general by superzealotry as well as by the mere thirst of power."

He Was Kicked Out Of Leadership

NOT UNDERSTANDING Gitlow's present hostility to the party from the control of which he was arbitrarily removed by Josef Stalin, there may be Americans who will hesitate to forgive a man who felt that "profligate sex relations among the youth were something we could not control and that as long as the youth could be depended upon to serve the interests of the movement it was best to leave the matter alone." He didn't voluntarily give up his command but was kicked out of the leadership of an organization—purporting to be an American political party—by a foreign despot, and only since then has he come to the point of deploring to a mild degree having "set them (American youth) the example of placing no moral limits about anything we found expedient to do."

It may be doubted that any man who once placed no moral limits on anything he found expedient to do is now telling the truth or ever can be believed on his word alone. He may be lying now to discredit those who defeated him. It is a known fact, however, that the Communists recognize no moral limits, so enormity is no challenge to belief.

The Pressure Rises

By Barnet Nover

Is A New Explosion Coming?

THE PEOPLE of Belgium and the Netherlands are phlegmatic folk, slow to act and not readily susceptible to jitters.

It is, therefore, a striking indication of the rise of what the Dutch government has called "less favorable symptoms in the international situation" that the Low Countries have again found it necessary to bring their armed forces up to full war strength and to make all other necessary preparations to resist invasion.

And it is the second time since November that they have gone to the great trouble and expense of doing so.

GERMANY DID NOT invade the Low Countries last November and she has held off doing so now. Again the German press is dismissing Belgian-Dutch alarms as a mare's nest of Allied origin.

It is not likely, however, that the hard-headed statesmen in Brussels and The Hague were imagining things. They have lived with danger long enough to be immune to any normal rise in international tensions. It must have been something which looked like a threat to their countries, whether it was really a threat or not, which compelled them to order a sudden increase in defense measures.

THE POINT which is not ignored in Brussels and The Hague, nor for that matter in Budapest, Belgrade, Stockholm and the capitals of other countries on the edge of European battlegrounds, is that Germany today is like a steam boiler in which the pressure is rising.

No one knows when that pressure will reach the breaking point. For some time Germany may be able to continue to fight a defensive war on land, a war of limited offensives in the air and a war of attrition against the Allied blockade. German spokesmen insist that the Third Reich cannot be starved out; that it can outwait the Allies. And there may be millions of people in Germany who have come to believe this.

THAT THE NAZI leaders believe this is very much open to question, however. They know that the effect of the Allied blockade is bound to be cumulative; that no country's reserves, certainly not Germany's, are adequate for a long war and if not replenished from outside sources are bound to disappear. They know that the Russo-Finnish war has been tantamount to a blockade of Germany on the east for it has diminished the possibility, never very great, that the Reich's shortages would be made good by importations from the Soviet Union.

They are also aware of the fact that the Allies are not sitting on their hands, that with each passing day whatever margin of superiority Germany may possess on land and in the air is being whittled away. And above all they are under pressure to act because theirs is a dynamic regime which without continuous movement may rapidly disintegrate.

THE NAZI leaders know all this. But so do the statesmen of the neutral nations along Germany's far-flung borders. And the latter must reckon with the possibility that unless the steam pressure in the German boiler finds an outlet or a succession of outlets it may lead to an internal explosion.

Sooner or later, Germany must make an attempt to break the barriers that have been erected around her; and when she does, she is certain to move along what the Nazi leaders believe to be the line of least resistance. In the meantime the ground is being tested. The Dutch and Belgian borders offer one possible outlet. An invasion of Holland and Belgium might produce certain real advantages for the Third Reich. It would bring the striking power of Germany's formidable air arm very much closer to British ports, naval bases, industrial centers. It would give German submarines the advantage of North Sea bases. It would also mean the addition to Germany of Holland's agricultural resources and Belgium's industrial power.

But in view of Belgian-Dutch solidarity and the fact that the Low Countries have greatly improved their defenses since the present war began, the losses might easily outweigh the gains.

THERE IS equally the possibility that Germany may move to the south and southeast, namely, across the Hungarian plains to the wheat and oil of Rumania. If the Balkan nations manage to establish as solid a bloc as the Low Countries have done, that path of conquest might also prove thorny and unprofitable.

And there is the third possibility of a German thrust into Scandinavia, for which, at least, the propagandist preparations have already been made. For the moment, however, such a thrust awaits the outcome of the Finnish war.

NO NATION on the margin of the war can take for granted that the next German aggression will occur at some point far removed from its own borders, least of all can the Netherlands or Belgium.

A German push to the north or the southeast might have some immediate advantages; but it would have no direct bearing on Germany's major objective, which is the smashing of Allied military and naval power. And under existing circumstances it is more than likely that any German conquests in Scandinavia or the Balkans would have to be shared, as the Polish conquests had to be shared, with Russia.

On the other hand, the invasion of the Low Countries might serve as the prelude to that "war in earnest" which Nazi leaders have long threatened to wage against the Allies. Great as are the risks of such an invasion, a German attack on Belgium and the Netherlands cannot be dismissed as beyond the range of possibility.

The alarm of the Hague and Brussels governments over the last week-end thus reflects a condition and not a theory and a condition which is not likely to improve as the war goes on.

Rich Diplomats Not Popular But Wealth Helps, Officials Say

The ostentatious "Coal Oil Johnny"" type of American diplomat who flings his money around is no more popular with the State Department than he is with Westbrook Pegler and other critics of diplomatic appointments dished out to the very rich.

Nevertheless, State Department officials feel that Pegler is pretty far off base when he argues, as he did in his Washington Post column of yesterday, that it is not necessary to appoint rich Americans to diplomatic posts.

"Says who?" asked Pegler in discussing the argument that only rich men could hold down important diplomatic posts.

Joseph P. Kennedy, American Ambassador to Great Britain, gets a salary of $17,500 a year, and something like $3,000 a year for expenses. The total, according to those familiar with the London post, is not enough to keep up the American Embassy, much less pay for the cost of entertainment. However, since Kennedy is a multimillionaire, he can afford the difference.

Lord Lothian, the British Ambassador here, gets a combined salary and allowance of $75,000 to $100,000 a year, it is said.

Col. Harvey Wasn't Rich

With one exception, the American Ambassadors to the Court of St. James's in the last two decades have been rich men. The exception was the late Col. George Harvey, who was sent to London by President Harding in 1921. Col. Harvey, who got in the limelight by wearing knee breeches, was supposed to be fairly "well off" when he went to London. However, when he resigned two years and eight months later, it was widely reported that the cost of his diplomatic post had just about flattened him financially.

"What is an American Ambassador in Europe to do?" asked a veteran career man at the State Department yesterday. "Suppose our Ambassador in London gets an invitation to dinner from the French Ambassador in London.

Should he reply that his country is opposed to such pretentious affairs, and then ask the French Ambassador and his wife to drop around to have a snack of hot dogs some time?"

There have been American Ambassadors in Europe who went in for simplicity. One such was William E. Dodd, who was this country's envoy in Berlin from 1933 to late in 1937. A college professor, he had no fortune to lavish on entertainment, and he did not hesitate to have members of his family work in the embassy.

Must Stick to Rules

When an American is sent to a foreign capital, State Department officials say, he has a definite job to perform, and they don't think he can make good if he tries to change the rules and isolates himself.

They don't have any records on it at the department, but they would be willing to bet that even old Benjamin Franklin, democratic as he was, dug deeply into his private fortune when he went to Paris to arouse sympathy for the American Revolution.

The Guam Problem

By Ernest K. Lindley

Navy's Request Exaggerated

THE TICKLISH Guam question is before Congress again, but some newspaper headlines are exaggerating the meaning of the Navy's request. The Navy is not asking for the "fortification" of Guam. It is asking only for $4,000,000 for harbor development.

The confusion and excitement began a year ago with the report of the Hepburn Board, a board of naval officers appointed at the direction of Congress to study the Navy's need for more bases. The Hepburn report contained a rather gingerly recommendation that Guam be developed as an advanced submarine and air base and perhaps ultimately as a fortified advanced fleet base. The cost of converting Guam into a fortified advanced base for the fleet is roughly estimated at $200,000,000.

Subsequently the Navy asked for $5,000,000 for development work at Guam—$4,000,000 for harbor improvement and $1,000,000 for aviation facilities. The $5,000,000 was deleted from the appropriation bill by Congress. Now the Navy is back asking for $4,000,000 for harbor improvement.

The harbor improvement—dredging and breakwater construction—is indispensable to the development of Guam as a naval base. But it is useful on its own account. Navy ships and Navy aircraft and the Pan-American clippers must continue to use the harbor as a way point to the East. The naval and air experts describe the harbor as hazardous.

Last year, as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Charles A. Edison told Congress that the $5,000,000 project "falls as far short of meeting the requirements of the Hepburn Board that it can, in reality, be considered a separate and distinct development . . ."

Nearest U. S. Point To Japanese Land

CONGRESS, therefore, could vote the money now asked for Guam without coming to any decision on the advisability of making it a fortified base.

If we are ever going to fight Japan in the Far East we probably will need Guam as a base. If Guam is unfortified it will almost certainly be occupied immediately by the Japanese in the event of war. It is only 1,300 miles from Yokohama, and only 800 miles from the Japanese fortified advanced base in the Bonin Islands. To recapture Guam and establish our fleet there in preparation for a final blow to Japanese naval power might, it is estimated, require a year or two of tedious and costly effort.

For $200,000,00, or thereabouts, according to our experts, Guam could be made practically impregnable: able to resist, that is, as long as its munitions and food supplies held out. For a lesser sum it could be made capable of retarding a Japanese naval advance toward our coasts for a number of weeks—perhaps until the main fleet, if it were engaged in the Atlantic, could be returned to the Pacific. And it is hardly conceivable that the Japanese would attempt to advance toward our coasts while our main fleet was in the Pacific, and unless we were also threatened by an enemy on the Atlantic side.

A fortified base at Guam would help to defend the Philippines, since Japanese communications could be harassed by airplanes and submarines based on Guam. From Guam also we could block Japanese expansion further south toward the Dutch East Indies, Australia and New Zealand.

What If Philippines Were Threatened

IT IS NO reassurance to a naval officer to remind him that we have decided to turn loose of the Philippines. Like ordinary citizens, he is entitled to doubt that we would stand by placidly if the Philippines were threatened with conquest by Japan. He may doubt also that we would keep our hands off if the Japanese, skirting the Philippines, struck at the British and Dutch Empires in the South Pacific.

For the present, however, we do not have the naval power, either in bases or ships, to undertake alone, with assurance of success, such distant missions. A rough estimate is that we would need twice the navy we now have, built, building and authorized.

The Navy is supposed to think of all possible eventualities. But to be prepared to meet them is another matter. The difficulty was brought out a few days ago by Admiral Stark, Chief of Naval Operations.

Admiral Stark said: "If our Navy is weaker than the combined strength of potential enemies, then our Navy is too small."

$4,000,000 Request Is Very Reasonable

BUT, HE WENT on to show, even if we were willing to spend the money, we could not promptly build up our Navy to the strength needed to match a coalition of potential enemies. We lack the shipyards, the skilled labor. So the Navy is asking for an increase in tonnage of only 25 per cent.

When that increase has been converted into ships—perhaps by 1945—we will have, according to Admiral Stark, a Navy which maintains the present 5:3 ratio in the Pacific but will be insufficient "to defend our home waters, the Monroe Doctrine, our possessions and our trade routes" against a coalition of Japan, Russia, Germany and Italy. He believes that against such a coalition we could defend our home coasts, Hawaii, the Panama Canal and its approaches, and Atlantic coastal shipping, but could not count on doing more.

Whether intended or not, one implication of Admiral Stark's analysis is that we haven't any business becoming seriously involved in the Far East while there is any doubt about the ability of Great Britain and France to control the Atlantic. And when, if ever, there ceases to be any doubt about their ability to control the Atlantic they will be able to release part of their navies for use in the Far East. It is too soon to attempt to make a major decision regarding them. In requesting $4,000,000 for harbor development the Navy does not ask for an irrevocable commitment.

55 Overcoats Given to Veterans

Fifty-five overcoats, 12 suits and 12 pairs of shoes have been received by the Army and Navy Union as a result of a plea made through The Post for clothes for needy veterans, it was announced yesterday. The drive is being carried on by the President's Own Garrison, No. 104.

F. F. Gardner, chairman of the overcoat committee, pointed out, however, that the total is still 45 short of the goal of 100 coats needed to care for men suggested by the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the Disabled American Veterans.

Present at the meeting were Miss Susan Craighill, Mrs. C. Benham Baldwin, Mrs. Carlton Ball, Miss Janet Brown, Mrs. Lake Churchill, Mrs. Kenton Harris, Miss Mary Hobart, Mrs. Jerome Lyle, Mrs. W. Pleasant Redd and Mrs. William Swift.

How Long Then, Cataline?

OF COURSE, the reason why the Dies Committee never discovered Father Coughlin may be because the priest of the Shrine of the Little Flower has been so shy, invisible and inaudible, hiding his light under a bushel. Maybe they need a new and increased budget and a lot of new investigators in order to discover the editor of Social Justice, the Sunday afternoon radio pleader, and the institutor of a libel suit that he afterward dropped.

The Dies Committee found out in considerable detail the rather obscure names of members of the American League for Peace and Democracy and the American Student Union. This was, by and large, all right with me. I think it high time that we should take a look at organizations which talk about American democracy and mean something else, and a little education on Communist methods of penetration into liberal groups can hurt nobody, unless maybe, the Communists.

The Dies Committee also discovered the German-American Bund, and revealed what had been published previously in numerous newspapers. But the report does not contain a single reference to the "Christian" boys—of the "Christian Front," or the "Christian Mobilizers"—who see in "Christianity" a war whoop for the persecution of nongentiles in this country.

I ONCE HEARD this definition of a detective: He is a man who closes his eyes and paints an eye on the eyelid so that people will think that his eyes are open.

Despite the fact that one has to pick one's way across or around the members of the Christian Front thrusting copies of Father Coughlin's Social Justice under one's nose all over Forty-second street in the very heart of New York, and in spite of the animal screams of blood lust that emerge from the patriotic throats of Mr. McWilliams' Christian Mobilizers, which, I understand, are rivals of the good father, thinking that they have discovered in their handsome chief a more likely "fuehrer of the future," our Government investigators have not noticed these boys.

The fact that Father Coughlin's name is enthusiastically cheered at the meetings of the German-American Bund; the fact that invitations to the Christian Front meetings and to bund meetings have been handed out synonymously by the same men at the same meetings; the fact that the Christian Front maintained picket lines at WMCA radio station every Sunday for a full year, bearing large placards on which was the picture of Father Coughlin, has escaped the notice of investigators

LAST SUNDAY Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, head of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, chief of the G-men, said that he understood that Father Coughlin had no connection with the Christian Front, although its followers sometimes used his name. I am afraid that Mr. Hoover should get around more. One might, for instance, get records of Father Coughlin's speeches, or read copies of Social Justice. It is not a pleasant task, but is, I should think, all in the day's work.

There was, for instance, that meeting in the Metropolitan Opera House in Philadelphia, on July 14, 1939, in which Father Coughlin, speaking from Detroit by wire and amplifier, praised the achievements of Mr. John Cassidy, commander of the Christian Front, urging the members of the audience to support and join that organization, and ending by conveying upon Mr. Cassidy the blessings of Almighty God. Mr. Cassidy is now under arrest with 16 others, on the ground that they are implicated in a plot to spread a general reign of terror.

Mr. Hoover thinks there is no connection between Father Coughlin and the Christian Front in spite of the fact that Father Coughlin's paper, Social Justice (or perhaps he has nothing to do with Social Justice, either) conducted a Christian Front contest for months last year, offering prizes for the best answers to certain political, economic and social questions. It was a cute contest, because each answer was accompanied by 50 cents, and the right answer (prepared by Father Coughlin) got a prize. The proceeds of this educational lottery were to be used for the broadcasting funds with which to help finance Father Coughlin's radio address to the Nation.

One question in this contest was: What is America's strongest safeguard against communism? The answer was, "A Christian Front."

In the issue of November 20, 1939, the question was asked, "What is Father Coughlin's most emphatic advice to the Christian Front?" and the answer was "meet force with force as a last resort."

Evidently the Christian Front boys think the time has come for the last resort. But Father Coughlin has nothing to do with it all!

THE DETROIT FREE PRESS, which has been almost as outspoken against Father Coughlin as Father Coughlin has been against the Detroit Free Press, once said, apropos the bout over the statement issued by Rabbi Franklin and authorized by Mr. Henry Ford:

"It is obvious that Father Coughlin either does not know what the word "interview" means or is giving still further evidence of his congenital inability to tell the truth."

The good father filed a petition in the Circuit Court of Wayne County, Mich., in December, 1938, on the basis of this and other statements, claiming that these and other words were "false, malicious, and defamatory," and were "understood to mean that the plaintiff is a trickster, a falsifier, a person of ill repute, without honor and unworthy of belief." Father Coughlin claimed "damage and injury to his feelings, occupation, profession and position and the sum of $1,000,000 as punitive damages."

A few days ago this suit was dropped, for reasons that are not clear, one of which may have been that the Detroit Free Press was prepared to attempt to prove in court that Father Coughlin had lied on numerous occasions and on a very wide variety of subjects. The word "congenital" was ill chosen, since it reflects upon Father Coughlin's parentage rather than upon the gentleman himself.

BUT FATHER COUGHLIN has never shown the slightest regard for the possible injury to other people's feelings, occupation, profession and position. He has, for instance, referred to this columnist repeatedly as a Communist sympathizer. Perhaps that is not a malicious lie, but is due to illiteracy. The Christian Front, using arguments advanced in Social Justice, conducted a systematic letter-writing campaign against my writings and radio talks, and might conceivably have damaged my occupation and profession. But let that drop. My only personal quarrel with Father Coughlin is that in his paper he calls me "Dottie." I do not feel intimate enough with him to call him "Chuck." Although "Chuck Coughlin" would be a good slogan!

Anyhow, and no joke, these "Christian" exciters to violence, and now, it would seem, planners of violence, have enjoyed a peculiarly privileged position among the groups labeled by the Dies Committee as subversive, and it would be interesting to know why.

The Dies Committee could, I am quite sure, uncover a lot of interesting facts by a little careful investigation into the activities, financing and interlocking relationships between the pastor of the Church of the Little Flower and political activities far beyond Detroit.

It is possible, due to the Gulf Stream influence, to come down to Miami to expose the alliance of a public enemy with a horse or dog track and wind up as a fellow stockholder. Winter

bereft of soothing green—
The gnarled trees bare their naked arms, the hill has lost its sheen;
Where once the balmy sunlight fell,
now darkness clothes the eaves.
Across the fields where colts did prance
now scurry dried-up leaves;
And now the flakes of snow recline
where fell the rays of sun.
But still it is my nose that tells me winter has begun!

The Story

ENGINEERS yesterday completed the ticklish job of floating a 500-ton caisson 2½ miles down the Potomac River and anchoring it into place for the $4,000,000 Maryland-Virginia Bridge at Morgantown, Md.

The caisson is a gigantic steel shell, open top and botton, into which concrete will be poured to anchor supporting piles for one pier, and serve as one foundation for the bridge superstructure. It was built in shallow water at Popes Creek.

Bell-shaped chambers at each corner of the structure were made air tight, and pumped full of air to give buoyancy for the voyage down river. When lowered into position, the caisson rests on a wooden platform, through which the supporting piles have been driven, and which in turn becomes the floor of the concrete form.

Scheduled for completion in September, the Morgantown Bridge will be 11,446 feet long, and the central span, 800 feet long, will rise 135 feet above the river level to permit passage of the largest ships.

Doris Duke Will Be Adornment of U. S. Ministry in Canada

New York, Jan. 16.

NOW THAT James H. R. Cromwell has been appointed our Minister to Canada, our attention has been called more strongly to his tall blonde wife, the former Doris Duke, heiress of the tobacco millions. Heaven knows the girl has had stupendous publicity, which she heartily dislikes. Doris is an extremely shy and retiring girl, and is especially unhappy when faced with cameramen. She is pretty, but no beauty, and has nothing really to fear. She just does not like to have her picture taken. It may be she is somewhat sensitive about her prominent jaw line.

Alice Hughes

She has had constant mention as the richest girl in the world, which may or may not be true. She is happiest at the home she and Cromwell built in Hawaii. Her estate near Somerville, N. J., which was built by her father, is almost regally rich, and though she keeps it in excellent repairs, she actually spends very little time there. She is a member of the rapidly growing American colony in the Hawaiian Islands, and is actually devoted to her home there.

It is interesting to note that in the new diplomatic post she will be stationed in the far north, the direct antithesis of the warm clime in which she is accustomed. She and Cromwell have been married for several years, and as far as the world knows, their union is an exceptionally happy one. Certain it is that Doris will be an adornment of our ministry.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—One of the local gazettes has bee nrunning a series on the general subject of New York grandmas who go to work. Two of them seem unusually interesting. For 19 years Mrs. Ellen Smith has been head of the religious book department of one of our largest department stores. She says, "I would rather work than do anything else in the world, particularly at this job. It takes salesmanship to sell Bibles." In the same store the head of the institution's hospital is Mrs. Y. D. Duke, who superintendts a staff of 48 people. Both are grandmothers, though they don't look it, and both are extremely happy in the work they are doing.

A local husband came before our lady judge, Jeanette Brill, with an unusual plea. Mr. John Holland was hauled to court for disorderly conduct, and his wife accused him of several unpleasant misdemeanors. After the learned judge had listened to the case Mrs. Holland said that if he behaved himself she was willing to take him back. Whereupon brother Holland threw the court into a turmoil. "She is the aggressor," he told the court, saying that several times she had locked him out of the house. "I don't want to go home," he said. "I'd rather go to jail. She can't get at me there." So Judge Brill, taken back, held him under heavy bail, and it is quite probable that Mr. Holland will go to jail, where his wife cannot get at him.

Q—Does not a Right Stag have to have family and money?

A—Those things help, but are not necessary if he is smooth enough other ways.

Q—Where should the would-be important deb make her debut?

A—Preferably at her home or at a smart club.

Q—What accomplishments should she possess?

A—She should, above all, be a good dancer, wear her clothes well, and have a good line.

Q—Should she go to college?

A—Preferably not, though she may dabble a little in the arts if she wants to.

Q—Should she be good at sports?

A—Yes, it is a great help if she can ride, swim, and play tennis well—provided, of course, she does so at the Right Clubs.

Q—Should she skate?

A—Yes, provided she goes to the rink at the Right Time and in the Right Groups.

Q—How should the would-be important deb dress?

Q—How should she dress at her debut party?

Q—What is the Right Dress?

A—It should not be too sophisticated, yet not pronouncedly of the jeune fille type. And it should have the air of having been bought out of town.

Q—Should the would-be important deb have good manners?

A—No. On the contrary, she should strive to be bored, casual and indifferent, except when she is talking to the Right Dowagers.

Q—How does the would-be important deb spend her days?

A—In a round of sleeping, shopping, cocktailing and preparing for her dances.

Q—What is her immediate reward?

A—Her immediate reward is a long rest in a sanitarium.

Q—What is her Ultimate Reward?

Q—How can she marry the Right Stag?

Husband Needs Loan to Cover Shortage in Accounts; Wife Is Averse to Signing Necessary Papers

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have been married 19 years and have four children, the eldest of whom is 18. My husband is a charter member of a certain organization in which, at present, he holds the office of treasurer. About six months ago the trustees were to audit his books, when he informed me that he was $200 short in his accounts. I nearly lost my mind worrying about it, knowing his credit was no good and that it would be impossible for him to borrow that amount. Finally he did make it up, by borrowing small amounts from friends (who have not yet been repaid), and continued in the office against my wishes.

Now the books are to be audited again and yesterday, out of a clear sky, a man called on me from a loan office, saying that my husband had applied for a loan, offering our furniture as security. I refused to sign the papers. Last night my husband said he had to raise $200 before the books were audited, or go to jail. I still refused to sign the papers. He told me I was a rotten wife and said other ugly things which upset me so much I couldn't sleep.

Some months ago he traded our car in on a new one, obligating himself for payments of more than $30 a month. A few weeks later he borrowed money from the bank on his employer's signature—something I didn't know until a month later. His salary amounts to $50 a week, out of which $15 a week is deducted to repay money he owes his firm. These deductions will continue through next month.

We were buying our home and the payments were three months in arrears as of last November, at which time he cashed in two of the children's insurance policies and paid up to that date. No payments have been made since. I do my own laundry and try in every way to economize, but it does no good. My son works and supports himself. He gives me $3 weekly out of his small salary, which is all the spending money I have, and I try to keep us clothed on this. I haven't worked for 15 years and have very little earning capacity.

Tell me the way out of my difficulty. Should I sign these papers get us into more debt? What else and get us into more debt? What else can I do? I will thank you for and advice. DESPERATE.

A Problem Requiring Legal Analysis

DEAR DESPERATE: Your primary obligation in this situation, as I see it, is to defend your own property interests (whatever they may be) and your children's social needs against your husband's dangerous financial muddling. To do this, you must have dependable legal counsel and representation, such as you can obtain free of charge from the Legal Aid Bureau, (a Community Chest agency), located at 1409 L street northwest, telephone NAtional 8674.

(Incidentally, a lawyer friend of mine, who takes time off from his private practice to assist with the philanthropic work of this organization, told me recently, in the course of a chance conversation, that he had represented five non-pay clients in court the past year, winning four cases out of five. I mention this to indicate the careful service the Bureau personnel gives to needy persons who request, and are eligible for, its free aid).

The question of how much responsibility a wife is legally or morally required to assume for her husband's short-sighted (and possibly criminal) mismanagement of their joint finances is one which no layman is qualified to settle. Offhand, I should say that, up to a certain point, it is loyal and fitting for her to make sacrifices intended to "save his face," providing he learns his lesson and mends his ways. But when such sacrifices prove futile, as in your case, I should think her moral obligation had been more than met, so that she was entitled thereafter to operate independently of him, and on a defensive basis—just as you are now inclined to do.

On the legal side, you have need to know whether—and to what extent—you might be implicating yourself in your husband's financial misdoings, in signing papers willy-nilly for the purpose of getting him out of repetitious embezzling "jams." You have need to know, also, to what extent you can safeguard and perpetuate your property rights in the home, furnishings, car, etc.

You need to learn what authoritative persuasion—if any—can be brought to bear upon your husband, that may put a stop to his fool's progress of "robbing Peter to pay Paul." You need, in short, a plan of action that has legal endorsement, and that may, if necessary, be legally enforced on behalf of Jeopardized Family versus Blundering Father. So take your problem to the Legal Aid Bureau without delay.

Reader Finds Us Lacking in Sweetness

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a mere man. I have just finished reading your reply of January 13 to "L. A. P.," the woman who asks if it can ever be considered "natural for a woman to be wholly unattracted to the opposite sex."

And now, I want to tell you how to make your column more popular and influential. It would be by ceasing to lambast the person who writes you for advice.

I had been intending to write you about a disturbingly real problem, but after reading your column day after day, and observing that the earnest seeker of your sympathetic understanding always "gets it in the neck," I have changed my mind. Why not adopt the Dorothy Dix attitude?

ANONYMOUS.

Is This Complainant Wearing False Whiskers?

DEAR ANONYMOUS: I am tempted to say, "Come out from behind your false whiskers, L. A. P., I know you." But I could be wrong. It could be a case of mistaken identity. Yet, the lettering on your typewriter is singularly similar to hers.

As for your suggestion that I imitate Dorothy Dix, may I counter by suggesting that if you prefer her manner, then why not avail yourself of her services? I am sorry if my impatience with buncombe, occassionally expressed here, should seem to you to be callous "lambasting," but after all, one can't please everybody. Isn't there a proverb to that effect—something about, "try to please everybody and you end by pleasing nobody?" M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

A Sure Score

Fried oysters made like this will win friends by the score: Select large oysters. Spread pickle relish lightly on half of them. Then with toothpicks fasten them in pairs, one oyster with relish and one without. Dip each pair into cracker or bread crumbs, then into beaten egg yolks and again into the crumbs. Fry in fat until well browned.

New Draperies For Spring

HAVE YOU fallen in love with the decorative schemes in "Gone With the Wind," those rich draperies with swag upon swag? Easily you can stitch up such draperies yourself, make a modest pair of windows as aristocratic as any in a southern mansion.

You get the most striking effect by combining two colors. You might make draperies and large swags of apricot sateen, let the smaller swags be of a rich brown sateen and have all the fringe and tasseled cords also in brown. Or would you like to combine burgundy rayon damask with beige?

So the swags will drape in graceful folds, cut each twice as deep as you want the finished swag to be. Shape the lower edge in a shallow curve, slant the ends.

Lining the swags gives them body, richness. Then—when they are stitched and trimmed—arrange swags in folds as the diagram shows and tack ends securely.

The larger swags you hang by sewing tape along the tops, tacking them to a valance board.

The smaller swags, you may hank on separate drapery rods, back of the draperies, as shown in our picture. Or you may tack them also to the valance board.

For formal rooms, charming to make your draperies long enough to trail on the floor. Drape back with tasseled cords.

How to line your draperies, sew on the fringe trimming? Complete professional directions for making draperies and curtains of many kinds are given in our 40-page booklet, "Make Your Own Curtains and Draperies." Gives diagrams, step-by-step directions for measuring, cutting, sewing and finishing. Tells how to make cornices, valances, ornamental tie-backs.

Send 15 cents in coins for our booklet, "Make Your Own Curtains and Draperies," to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address, and the name of booklet.

Varied Desserts In Pastry Roll

For a dressy pastry roll, pat rich biscuit dough until it is half an inch thick. Lightly spread butter, cinnamon and sugar on the dough, then cover it generously with sweetened fruit, jam or jelly—cranberry, peach, apple or apricot are tops. Roll quickly and fit into a well greased loaf dish. Bake about 30 minutes for a roll of average size. This one is good, warm or old, topped with hot or chilled orange or lemon sauce.

If you want to serve an ice cream roll, spread ice cream on the cooled, baked roll. Roll up and cover with fruit, chocolate or caramel sauce, depending upon the flavor of the cream. Serve immediately. For a fancy roll dessert, cover the baked roll with a thick jellied fruit mixture, chocolate cream filling or any fruit frosting. Roll up and wrap in waxed paper. Chill until time to serve.

Diet Program May Include Some Concessions to Taste

Grown-ups Need to Cater to Appetites; Protective Foods, However, Must Be Eaten Even in Minimum 800-Calorie Regime

By Ida Jean Kain

PSYCHOLOGISTS claim that it is possible to account for anyone's action by his or her childhood. Looking back at my Scotch Presbyterian upbringing, I can see that there were no compromises with life. Black was black and white was white and there were no gray tones.

Ida Jean Kain

We were expected to eat our vegetables. The fact that we might not like spinach had nothing to do with the case. And it didn't occur to us to ask for a second helping of dessert. We knew we wouldn't get it! And "no candy between meals" didn't mean we could have a piece!

Perhaps that helps to explain why, when I put you on a diet, I really put you on a diet! At any rate, one reducer is protesting at what she calls my failure to compromise! She says:

"I am absolutely convinced that 50 per cent of the people who begin a diet and then give it up would not do so if you would meet a few of the 'must haves' half way!"

Use Saccharine Instead

As she goes on to explain . . . "After all, we middle-aged women have been doing about as we please for a long time. And self-control along food lines can't be developed immediately. It gets easier in time, of course—so I'm really pleading for the possible."

Take coffee, for example! She writes.

"The craving for coffee on a diet becomes even greater than usual, perhaps because it is a stimulant. You give the reducer coffee, but often without cream and sugar, and clear coffee is poison to me! So why not explain the calories and food value of canned milk in place of cream, and the fact that one-fourth of a grain of saccharine will sweeten a cup of coffee nicely?"

All right! There are no calories in saccharine. If you wish to use it to sweeten your coffee, why not? All I ask is that you do not take saccharine in your coffee and then eat two sugared doughnuts—as I sometimes see people doing!

200 Calories to Spend

Evaporated, unsweetened milk contains only 20 calories a tablespoon. But 18 per cent cream contains only 30 calories a tablespoon! If black coffee is "poison" to you, by all means take it the way you like it!

This particular reducer made concessions to her own likes and dislikes, stayed on her diet, and lost 10 pounds. But as the result of her experience she is convinced that not enough dietary allowance is made for the difference in individual tastes. On that score she is right! Reducing diets are made for the average person and to some degree your preferences should be taken into consideration. That, however, is up to you!

First, make sure that all the protective foods are included for the sake of health and looks. It takes a minimum of 800 calories to include this list. If you are on a 1,000-calorie diet, you then have 200 calories to send as you please. On a 1,200-calorie diet, you have 400 calories left over—plenty for cream and sugar in your coffee and dessert!

Ideal Parent Is a 'Good Pal,' Children Declare in Survey

By the Associated Press

Norman, Okla.—SO YOU want to be a pal to your children?

Then it may interest you to know that your boy and girl quite likely are longing for the chance to be pals with you. They want to talk things over with you and they crave your understanding. But, if they are like many of the 2,000 children who answered a simple question for the Oklahoma Family Life Institute, they don't know how to go about it—any more than you do. Forty per cent of the 2,000 expressed a wish for companionship.

No Criticism Invited

Dr. Alice Sowers, director of the institute, had children in English classes in all parts of the country write an essay on "The Kind of a Parent I Would Like to Be." The papers weren't signed; the children didn't know in advance they were to be written, no criticism of parents was invited.

They pointed out a desire for kindness, sincerity, fairness and justice, but each child, too, insisted that his own parents were the best in the world.

What They Say

Here are some of the conclusions that may not surprise you: "The first thing parents should do is remember their own childhood."

"Let your child take the course he wants to take in school and his grades will be better. Do not make him follow your choice of his profession. Let him have his own."

"Do not brag. Do not lie. Do not spy on your child."

"Let religion have a place in your home."

Possible Surprises

And here are some of the children's ideas that may be a surprise.

They want lessons in thrift. They deplore too large allowances and want their parents to be economical.

They prefer to earn money themselves and hate the idea of having their allowances increased at a family sacrifice.

They want discipline, but fair discipline.

They ask for family conferences to plan work for each member of the family and to settle problems.

They want their parents to keep abreast of the times.

Higher than the material aspects of life, such as home furnishings, standards of housekeeping, and allowances, the children ranked parental traits like kindness, sincerity, fairness and justice. On the other hand they felt that a father should be able to support his family comfortably.

The youngsters think parents should avoid nagging, should scold only when necessary, should try to see things from the young people's point of view, and when punishment really is necessary should administer it promptly, but never while angry.

Mrs. Edison's Fete for First Lady Heads List of Society Luncheons

Guests' Names Off-the-Record for Party at 1925 F Street Club; Mrs. Perry Heath Honors Mrs. McNary; Mrs. Bachrach Entertains

By Hope Ridings Miller.

LUNCHING LADIES took over the social scene yesterday when midday parties accented the calendar for a number of official and residential hostesses. Mrs. Roosevelt was guest of honor at a luncheon given by Mrs. Charles A. Edison, wife of the Secretary of the Navy. The event was one in a series planned annually for the First Lady by wives of Cabinet members.

HOPE R. MILLER

Like the others, Mrs. Edison's was off-the-record so far as the guest list was concerned. Like the others, her party was small and informal. Spring blossoms—roses, snapdragons and marguerites—decorated the table at the 1925 F Street Club, where the party took place and where Mrs. Edison will entertain at luncheon again today.

Secretary and Mrs. Edison will be guests at a dinner to be given this evening by Rear Admiral and Mrs. W. P. Woodson. Early tomorrow, Mrs. Edison will be off to New York to spend a few days.

Another luncheon on yesterday's calendar was the one given by Mrs. Perry Heath in honor of Mrs. Charles L. McNary, wife of the Senate Minority Leader. Mrs. Heath will be luncheon hostess again tomorrow when she will fete Mrs. Arthur H. Vandenberg.

As pleasant a luncheon as I've been to lately was the one given yesterday by Mrs. Walter K. Bachrach in honor of her house guest, Mrs. Louis Fabian Bachrach, of West Newton, Mass., who has been widely feted here since she arrived a few days ago en route home from White Sulphur Springs. She will leave Washington Friday.

Party Takes Place At Hotel Raleigh

The party took place in the Pall Mall room of the Hotel Raleigh where guests were seated at a long, flower-decked table. Covers were laid for 18.

Mrs. Bachrach, the hostess, whose ensembles always are the last word in style, was trimly turned out in a frock of pea-green jersey made on draped lines and worn with a tricky matching turban ornamented with a bunch of grapes on the front. Mrs. Bachrach, the honor guest, had chosen a smart black ensemble.

Others in the company included Mrs. Leo Pasvolsky, who met the visitor in Maine some time ago and will entertain for her at luncheon today.

Sometimes Called 'The Bird Woman'

Table talk, turning on a variety of interests, finally focused on a fascinating hobby when someone asked the guest of honor about her macaws. It seems her home in West Newton has a tropical garden connected with it and that sometimes she is called "the bird woman" because of her collection of macaws for which the garden was built.

Bird-collecting, however, is her husband's hobby rather than hers, Mrs. Bachrach said. He began a few years ago when he acquired four macaws, including a magnificent white-crested cockatoo and "an ordinary parrot."

Macaw Diet Makes Table Talk

Toast and coffee is the favored Sunday morning diet for the white cockatoo, the honor guest said. Seeds are a staple food for her pets and like most macaws, they can eat a cracker most any time. The four make a lot of noise but one soon gets used to that, according to Mrs. Bachrach. And certainly it must be fun to have a tropical garden, complete with macaws, in a New England town.

Mrs. Marshall Diggs, in a tailored teal-blue suit with a matching sailor, was among guests at the luncheon. Others there included Mrs. Clarence F. Burton, wearing a stunning blue-green suit with a blue fox collar; Mrs. J. R. McCarl; Mrs. Harrison Brand, jr., who went on later to the musicale at the White House; Mrs. H. H. Moffett, Mrs. Thomas J. Groom, Mrs. William Francis Kelly, and Mrs. Clyde B. Asher.

Others in the company were Mrs. John F. Maury, Mrs. Francis Brooke, Mrs. Edward Hillyer, Mrs. Cooper C. Lightbown, Mrs. C. C. Schiffeler and Mrs. Harold Dean Krafft.

Aunts Entertain Mrs. Garnett, Jr.

Mrs. A. Y. P. Garnett, jr., the former Miss Mildred McKinney, daughter of Capt. Booth McKinney, U. S. N., and Mrs. McKinney, was the guest of honor at a luncheon yesterday at the Mayflower given by her aunts, Mrs. Henry S. Venn and Miss Ellen Garnett.

The company included Mrs. Richard Emory, Mrs. Godfrey W. Kauffman, Mrs. Lauriston Hardin, Mrs. Warren Elliott, Mrs. Edmond Ellerson, Mrs. Gale McLean, Miss Emily Davis, Mrs. Arnold Wilcox, Miss Margot Lee, Miss Louise Burke, Miss Juliet Dulany, Mrs. Robinson McIlvaine, Mrs. Fairfax Randolph and Mrs. Hugh D. Wise, jr.

Belle Johnson Goes to New York

Miss Belle Johnson, daughter of Mrs. Moulton K. Johnson, went to New York yesterday for a visit with her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Gardner Emmons.

She will return on Friday, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Emmons, who will spend the week-end with Mrs. Johnson. Mrs. Emmons is the former Miss Cassie Johnson.

Bacons Show Russian Movies

With smuggled movies of Russia as the high point of the evening, Mrs. Robert Low Bacon gathered in a few friends yesterday for a showing of her pictures, followed by a buffet supper at her home on F street northwest.

Although the one roll of film taken in Russia—which was all Mrs. Bacon could carry across the border in her handbag—was of immense interest, the majority of the movies were taken on a Baltic cruise last summer. Also on the cruise were Mr. and Mrs. Emil Hurja, who attended Mrs. Bacon's party. Guests last evening were mostly from the Congressional set.

The Bacon girls, Martha and Virginia, accompanied their mother on the cruise, later going on to Russia. While traveling through Russia the girls, dressed simply in tailored frocks and often with kerchiefs tied about their heads—sometimes were mistaken for peasants. Once when watching a group dancing in the streets they were asked to join.

Mr. and Mrs. L. Corrin Strong, Mrs. John R. Williams, Harry Villard and Mr. and Mrs. L. M. C. Smith are other members of Capital society who have witnessed this week's production of the Civic Theater.

Mr. and Mrs. Saugstad Entertain at Dinner

The Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Henry F. Grady and Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Kiplinger were the guests in whose honor Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Saugstad entertained at dinner last evening.

The party, which took place at their home on Massachusetts avenue, was one in a series Mr. and Mrs. Saugstad are giving this season.

Constitution Hall Concert Tonight

The Brazilian Ambassador, Carlos Martins, and Mme. Martins will attend the National Symphony Orchestra concert in Constitution Hall at 8:30 tonight as guests of Mrs. Hans Kindler, wife of the orchestra's conductor. The soloist on tonight's program is Mme. Guiomar Novaes, distinguished Brazilian pianist, whose musical education was sponsored to a large extent by the Government of Brazil.

Mme. Novaes will play with the orchestra a new work by Brazil's outstanding composer, Heitor Villa-Lobos' "Momo Precoce," and also Mozart's Concerto in E flat major. In addition, the orchestra, under Dr. Kindler, will play Stravinsky's "Fire Bird" suite, and a suite of Handel pieces arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty.

Mrs. Mallan, Mr. Rapley Wed

Mrs. Frederica McKenney Mallan and William W. Rapley were married yesterday at Handley Hall, the home of the bride's father, Frederic D. McKenney, of Kensington, Md.

Only members of the two families witnessed the ceremony, at which the Rev. Fred S. Buschmeyer officiated. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a floor-length gown of gray crepe made on tailored lines with the neck outlined in coral. She carried coral African daisies and yellow orchids.

Immediately after the wedding the couple left for a honeymoon in the South. They will return to Washington about the middle of March.

Mrs. Mallan studied at Holton Arms and was graduated from the Ogontz School. She was presented to Capital society several seasons ago.

Mr. Rapley, who was divorced several years ago from the former Miss Harriet Huntress, attended Cornell University.

Legionnaires Call at Polish Embassy to See Gen. Haller, Here on Good-Will Tour

THE POLISH EMBASSY was buzzing with activity yesterday afternoon as several members of the American Legion called to pay their respects to Gen. Joseph Haller, Polish soldier and statesman who is in this country on a good-will tour. A rather ironical touch at the embassy these days, incidentally, is a mass of travel booklets extolling the beauties of Poland and piled on a table in the waiting room.

The general paid a previous visit to this country in 1923 when he was guest at a convention of the American Legion in San Francisco. Yesterday afternoon before renewing old Army friendships he paid a call on Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, whose husband held such a high place in Polish affections for his help in restoring the now non-existent country after the World War. Today he will see President Roosevelt.

THE BEARDED SOLDIER, who fought both Russians and Germans after the Treaty of Brest-Litovsk which signaled the defeat of Russia by Germany, has been organizing Polish armies in France to fight with the Allies. The work is being financed with loans from France and England to be repaid, according to the general, when his country is free again.

With four aides who accompanied him, and M. Trojowski, former newspaperman who is one of the new counselors of the embassy in the recent shake-up of personnel, the general will leave the end of this week for a tour of the entire country. He will visit Polish-Americans in virtually every small town and city from Orchard Lake to New York to enlist their sympathies for Polish relief.

SEVEN HUNDRED thousand soldiers and refugees, the general estimates, are now safely out of the country, and many civilians are living a drab existence in Hungary, Rumania and France. The rest of Poland's population of 35,000,000 remained behind, and their friends and relatives hear little from them. M. Trojowski received yesterday a postcard from his mother, mailed five weeks before, the first word he had had from her since war began.

The general said yesterday that those of his fellow countrymen who weren't in concentration camps were in "expulsion camps." These latter are settlements in and around Warsaw in which the Nazis are herding many Poles and Jews to leave the rest of the country free for Germans. One of his aides said that the Poles were not allowed to hold jobs and were living on possessions they could sell.

As far as the unfortunate Poles are concerned, said the general, who arrived only last week from Europe, it has made little difference whether they were caught in the German or Russian invasion. "The cruelty of the Nazis is organized, while that of the Soviets is more haphazard," he said.

The general also told of a German proclamation issued in October ordering Polish citizens to relinquish the road when they encountered German authorities and saying that in stores and market places the vanquished must wait until the conquerors were served.

MRS. MARY BRECKINRIDGE, whose social contacts are limited for most of the year to the nurses and mountaineers at her Frontier Nursing Service in Kentucky, is having a whirl while in Washington. She will dine informally at the White House this evening, with Justice McReynolds tomorrow, and will lunch with Marion and Elizabeth Shouse today. She is in the Capital this week for the annual meeting of her Nursing Service and for the Conference of Children of Democracy, to which she was named by President Roosevelt.

THE DEVOTED FOUNDER of the organization which provides medical aid for underprivileged mountaineers has completely recovered after a courageous struggle from injuries which included a broken back suffered when she was thrown from a horse in Kentucky. When able to be moved from the hospital she was taken in a plaster cast back to the mountains and requested that all her friends who wanted to send her books and flowers send the money instead to her nursing service.

While in the Capital Mrs. Breckinridge is directing plans for the benefit tea to be held a week from Saturday at the Mayflower, when John Mason Brown, dramatic critic, will speak.

Mrs. Roosevelt Entertains 300 At Musicale

Miss Kraus, Rachlin And Mittler Present White House Program

Mrs. Roosevelt entertained 300 guests at a muicale yesterday afternoon at the White House. Featured artists were Miss Charlotte Kraus, mezzo-soprano, who left Vienna a year ago and who sang at Hyde Park last summer for the Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Denmark; Ezra Rachlin, pianist, and Franz Mittler, accompanist.

The program was given in the East Room. Mr. Rachlin, who began the program, played four numbers from Chopin in his first group, and three from Shostakovich and one from Liszt ("Tarantella Veneziae Napoli") in his second group. Miss Kraus sang Schubert's "An die Laute" and Brahms' "Wiegenlied" and several folk songs. Her final numbers were Franz Mittler's "Bohemian Folksong;" Kreisler's "Caprice Viennoise" and Strauss' "Waltzime in Vienna."

This afternoon she will entertain at a reception at the White House for the council of the General Federation of Women's Clubs from 4 to 5 o'clock, and later will receive a group of Colgate students who are doing research and surveys in Washington.

Mrs. Roosevelt plans to attend the opening session of the White House conference on "Children in a Democracy" tomorrow morning, and in the afternoon she will be present at the reception of the Congressional Club. The biggest item on her calendar tomorrow is the departmental reception, at which she and the President will entertain tomorrow evening.

White House Meeting On Friday Evening

A meeting of the White House conference on "Children in a Democracy" will take place Friday evening at the White House, where President Roosevelt will speak. Saturday morning Mrs. Roosevelt will speak before the final session of the conference. On Saturday afternoon and evening the First Lady is scheduled to attend the meeting of the Washington Youth Council at Pierce Hall.

Mrs. Roosevelt will have her next press conference on Monday at 10 a. m. She will attend Mrs. Lawrence Townsend's musicale that morning, and that evening she will be present at the world premiere of "Abe Lincoln in Illinois."

The Post Club Editor.

Club leaders from every State in the Union last night welcomed members of Congress, officials from their States and other friends at the reception given at the Mayflower Hotel in connection with the annual midwinter meeting of the board of the General Federation of Women's Clubs. Mrs. Saidie Orr Dunbar, president, who spent the day in committee meetings, headed the receiving line.

Mrs. Dunbar's gown was of ashes of roses chiffon and lace, made with a train and trimmed with dubonnet velvet. Her corsage was of orchids. Next in line was Mrs. John L. Whitehurst, first vice president, who wore pale blue lace over taffeta. Mrs. LaFell Dickinson, second vice president, was in black velvet, embroidered with sequins, and Mrs. Horace B. Ritchie, recording secretary, in a draped gown of rose beige chiffon. Mrs. J. L. B. Buck, the treasurer, wore dark blue velvet.

Several hundred guests attended the affair, which was the major social event of the week for the federation officers, and was preceded by a dinner given by Mrs. Dunbar for members of her cabinet.

Mrs. Gustav Ketterer, chairman of the department of legislation, wore a frock of white chiffon, the bodice trimmed in sequins, and with it a chinchilla cape. Mrs. David S. Hunter, a black marquisette trimmed with black applique; Mrs. F. F. Boussot, a gown of blue French net and Mrs. Tom B. Davis, a black skirt with a red bodice.

Bennett, chairman of war veterans, in black and white tulle; Mrs. A. F. Nuquist, chairman of child welfare, in black crepe made on princess lines; Mrs. Herbert F. War Handicaps Nurse Service, Says Director

British Girls Being Called Home, 200 Capital Women Told

The European war has reached the Kentucky mountains, Mrs. Mary Breckinridge, director of the Frontier Nursing Service, told an audience of nearly 200 women yesterday. Speaking at the George Hewitt Myers Textile Museum, where she gave an illustrated lecture on the service under auspices of the Washington committee, Mrs. Breckinridge said the first school of midwifery in the United States had been started there because British nurses who were on the staff now were being called home.

These girls who are members of the British territorial reserve and trained in the Scotch Highland and Islands Nursing Service, are going home to work among expectant mothers who have been sent out from London in evacuation of the city. American frontier nurses until now also have been trained in the London school of midwifery. Because of war, they cannot study there and a course has been started for the first time, said Mrs. Breckinridge. A course has been established in the hospital at Hyden, Ky., conducted by the nursing service. Only two girls can be trained at a time, but six will be graduated by June.

The other problem, now faced by the service, said Mrs. Breckinridge, is to persuade young graduate physicians who plan to specialize in obstetrics, to go there before they locate in a community to establish a practice and spend six months with the Frontier Nursing Service Hospital, serving under its medical director. This will serve the double purpose of giving them knowledge of rural conditions and practice and being a great aid to the service, she explained.

The training of the nurses in midwifery for frontier work not only is aiding Kentucky, but other frontiers—Alaska, Mexico, Puerto Rico and Haiti, all of which have asked for them, she said. Wherever nurses have to reach their patients by horseback, those trained in the Frontier Nursing Service are in demand. The primitive conditions in such areas are so different from those in a white-lined hospital, she said, that only a nurse with special training is equipped to meet them.

Mrs. Lawrence Groner introduced Miss Breckinridge.

L. C. Strong Addresses Rally of Music Clubs

L. Corrin Strong, president of the National Symphony Association, was guest speaker at the District Federation of Music Clubs' midwinter rally last evening in Woodward Hall of the Calvary Baptist Church.

Included on the program were the Elizabeth Somers Glee Club under the direction of Mary Barnett; the Madrigal Singers, directed by Mrs. J. M. Sylvester; vocal solos by Christine Church and Hazel Bergstrom Cake; Helene Finnacom, pianist, and Eloy Fominaya, violinist. Eva Whitford Lovette, president of the federation, presided.

Reporter Tells Of Polish War

Lloyd Lehrbas Associated Press correspondent, wearing the suit he had on when he came out of Poland eight days after Warsaw was first bombed, yesterday described some of his war experiences for members of the Women's National Press Club. He spoke at the club's weekly luncheon at the Willard.

Mr. Lehrbas mentioned the suit because that and the hat he wore were the only belongings he brought out with him.

He described the helplessness of the Polish army, fighting blindly after half its air force had been destroyed before it realized the war had started. The Germans not only had advantage with their great mechanical units, but, by means of their planes, could see every move the Poles were making.

He described various stages of his hazardous trip out of Poland, the last by train to the Rumanian border, with German planes overhead all the way. The train was not bombed, but every station where it stoppped was raided, he said. He and two other newspaper correspondents tried to reach a telephone on each lap of their journey, but found one town after another deserted and communications cut. Not until they were over the border could they send their stories through.

The war will go on for some time, Mr. Lehrbas believes—"and if we're smart we won't get into it."

Ruby Black, the club president, introduced him, and also presented Miss Mary Breckrinridge, director of the Frontier Nursing Service, who spoke briefly.

Ring Welcomes Housing Advice

Suggestions from persons knowing of buildings suitable for reconditioning for the housing of low income groups are welcomed by the Alley Dwelling Authority, James Ring, of the Authority, yesterday told the housing committee of the department of government and economic welfare of the D. C. Voteless League of Women Voters.

Addressing a luncheon meeting at the Y. W. C. A., he said one of the problems of low-cost housing was finding groups of buildings in slum areas, which were solid structures and in which the rooms would lend themselves to remodeling. Hopkins place so far is the only one found suitable for a reconditioning project on a large scale, he said.

The provision of dwellings for families moved out while the reconditioning is in process is another serious problem the Alley Dwelling Authority faces, he said.

Alliance Backs Health Chief

The Housekeepers' Alliance at its meeting yesterday, passed a resolution petitioning the District committees of the House and Senate to reject that part of the Seal plan for District reorganization which would substitute a medical officer of the Federal services for a health officer for the District appointed by the President.

It was pointed out by Mrs. Harvey Wiley, chairman of civics, that replacing the District health officer with a Federal official would be a backward step.

The alliance also passed a resolution petitioning the President "to use his high office to extend the moral embargo now existing for implements of war, to iron ore, scrap iron and aeronautical gasoline." Action likewise was taken opposing the Randolph bill, relating to the diversion of motor tax from road maintenance to other uses and in support of the Sumner bill. The alliance thus reaffirmed its stand for national representation and recommended that the General Federation of Women's Clubs indorse the measure soon.

Mrs. Frederic Newburgh, president, presented the speaker, Mrs. Helen Nichols Church, who talked on nutrition. Mrs. Ruth Snodgrass and Mrs. Frederick Yates were hostesses.

Rep. Hinshaw to Speak

The Montgomery County Federation of Republican Women, which meets tomorrow afternoon at the Jesup Blair Community Building in Silver Spring, will be addressed by Representative Hinshaw, of California. Mrs. Bertha Shanks Chaney will preside.

Tariff Chief Testifies on Argentina

Fox Is Sure State Department Made All Justified Protest

By the Associated Press

A member of the Tariff Commission told the House Ways and Means Committee yesterday he was sure that the State Department had protested British and French trade discriminations against the United States in Argentina—if such discriminations existed.

Commissioner A. Manuel Fox gave the assurance after Representative Woodruff (Republican), of Michigan, asserted that other nations were not according the United States the same tariff-equality treatment which this nation extended under the reciprocal trade program.

Henry F. Grady, Assistant Secretary of State, who had been waiting two days to testify before the committee, would not confirm or deny Fox's statement.

At the State Department it was said that the exchange situation between Britain and France and Argentina was discussed with the first two countries last December for the purpose of obtaining information while negotiations were underway for a trade agreement with the Argentine.

A discussion to obtain information is not regarded in diplomatic circles as a protest, and the Argentine negotiations continued after the discussions, being officially etrminated only recently.

Argentina announced, said Representative Woodruff, that she would buy from no other country anything she could obtain from Britain and France.

"That indicates," he said, "that she had an agreement with those two countries so favorable that she couldn't afford to accept any proposition presented by our Secretary of State."

Fox replied that negotiations for an Argentine agreement had collapsed because no assurances would be given that discriminations would be stopped.

In no instance, Woodruff contended, has the United States received the benefits of tariff concessions made between any other nations.

He said that 290 bilateral trade treaties exist between other nations and that none of them extend their benefits to us, adding that the "only leveling of trade barriers has taken place in the good old United States."

Beginning by challenging his right to a Republican membership on the Tariff Commission, the Republicans ended by praising him, as Representative Gearhart (Republican), California, said, "for the way you have held up under this long grilling."

Suicide Succeeds After His First Attempt Is Balked

Raphael W. Bryan, 45, 1143 Fourth street northeast, killed himself by gas yesterday. He was frustrated in a similar attempt less than three months ago.

He was found with his face resting on a stove burner by his son, Benjamin W. Bryan, 21, of Oxon Hill, Md. His head was covered with a blanket, police stated, and gas was escaping from the unlighted jet.

An employe of the District pumping station, Bryan had been on leave since December 30. Young Bryan said his father had been ill. Bryan was found unconscious in his kitchen on October 22, but was revived.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald issued a suicide certificate.

Bathtub Gin Era Began 20 Years Ago

Sheppard Foresees Return of Dry Days In Senate Speech

Twenty years ago today—remember?

Elihu Root was reported on the verge of coming out for Gen. Leonard Wood as the Republican Presidential nominee, the Sinn Feiners were making much trouble in Ireland and, locally, Al Jolson was wowing them at Poli's Theater in "Sinbad."

The big story of the day was the advent of national prohibition, as Senator Morris Sheppard, of Texas, recalled with fervor yesterday on the Senate floor in a speech on the twentieth anniversary of the eighteenth amendment.

Two full decades have passed since the dawn of the "noble experiment" and, as far as Senator Sheppard, author of the eighteenth amendment, is concerned, the Nation could do far worse than having failed to make it "take" the first time, and dry, dry again.

It was at 12:01 a. m., January 17, 1920, that the amendment, with the Volstead act as its teeth, went into effect. Repeal in 1933 was a mistake, Senator Sheppard said yesterday. A mistake, he hopes, will be rectified.

The dean of Congress, in years of service, he proposed a ban on liquor advertising in newspapers, periodicals and on the radio, also on the sale of intoxicants in stores handling groceries, drugs or other commodities.

"We cannot continue," he said, "to pour nearly 2,000,000,000 gallons of alcoholic poison every year into the veins of our democracy and expect it to survive."

He voiced his belief national prohibition is on the way back, citing increasing local option and the growth of antialcohol sentiment.

Washington was dry—technically—on the night of January 16, 1920. The District had gone dry during the War, but bootlegging already flourished here on that exciting "last night" when William Jennings Bryan addressed a "watch party" in First Congregational Church.

D. C. Bar Names Hill President

Lawyers to Fight 'Vicious Methods' Of Collecting Debts In Washington

Francis W. Hill, jr., was elected president of the District Bar Association last night as the lawyers moved to ban "vicious" collection methods here.

HILL

The annual meeting at the Mayflower Hotel also heard retiring President Sefton Darr urge the Bar Association to support the move for District suffrage and to investigate the merits of the Seal reorganization plan.

Elected with Hill were Frederick Stohlman, first vice president; Al Philip Kane, second vice president; Wilbur Gray, vice president; Milton King, treasurer, and three new members of the trustees, A. K. Shipe, William E. Richardson, and Samuel M. Boyd.

STOHLMAN

The association adopted recommendations seeking legislation to regulate installment collections after George D. Horning, jr., reporting for a special committee, described "shocking evidence" of oppression of the poor and needy.

One resolution would outlaw the "assignment of wages contract" by which a debtor unqualifiedly transfers his earnings to the creditor. This device, the report said, is usually applied against low income wage earners. By this contract the debtor is deprived of the right to defend an unjust claim in court. It causes extreme hardship by depriving the debtor of urgently needed pay.

Installment Buying Eyed

Again, the association requested a modern installment selling law for the District. Under it, contracts of automobile financing companies, for example, would be required to point out just what protection the buyer is getting by the compulsory insurance and would regulate the insurance rates.

Abuses of repossession would be prevented through various controls, and should the buyer-debtor request an auction of the repossessed article, he is to get back any sums over the balance due. The practice of repossessing an auto, for instance, and then pressing claims for collection of the balance due, would be prohibited.

The "add on" contract, by which a buyer of more than one article at the same store must pay for all of them before any one becomes his property, and the use of garnishments to harass employes and employers alike, often resulting in dismissal of the employe, would be prohibited.

The assembly approved the committee suggestions that the procedure of the Small Claims Court be extended to the Municipal Court in the matter of attachments and garnishments, but turned down a proposal to limit the allowance of attorney's fees.

Darr Urges Liberality

In his report to the board of directors, presented before the membership, Darr warned the association to meet changing economic and social conditions. This calls for taking active civic leadership, he said, and not "calling everything new under the sun unconstitutional, un-American, and contrary to the laws of God."

Darr advised the bar to push its program of judicial reform and legal assistance for the poor and underprivileged. He called for a public defender system and creation of a judicial council to simplify District court procedure.

The membership adopted a special committee's recommendation for the judicial council.

A report of the Committee on Suppression of Unauthorized Practice of Law was presented by Richard L. Merrick.

A former assistant corporation counsel, the new bar leader served as treasurer of the organization for two years. Hill is a member of the law firm of Garnett, Barbour, Pickett & Hill.

He is 44, a native of Prince Georges County, and a graduate of St. John's College, Annapolis. Hill served here in the corporation counsel's office from 1919 to 1923. With his wife and two children, Daviette, 5, and Frances, 1½, he makes his home in Kenwood, Md.

A past president of the Barristers Club, Hill is also a member of the American Bar Association, Lawyers Club and Chevy Chase Club.

Disciples, Missionaries Describe Work

Moral and Material Aid Urged at Capital Area Assembly

Four hundred members of Capital Area Disciples of Christ, yesterday heard missionaries from India, China and America's south describe their work and urge moral and material support.

Dr. Donald A. McGavran told the rally at Columbia Heights Christian Church that India is undergoing a tremendous social revolution, "before which past social revolutions in other parts of the world seem insignificant," and carrying with it a great awakening of Christianity.

A religious education specialist, the speaker said the Christian conceptions of marriage and brotherhood have given the people of India, especially countless thousands of the 150,000,000 "untouchables," new confidence and hope.

From the Southern Christian Institute of Edwards, Miss., came John Long, its president, to cite the need for home missions, and to prove that such schools "were not a waste of mission money." The institute gives colored pupils religious and academic instruction.

Another speaker was Dr. Alexander Paul, executive secretary of Oriental Missions for the United Christian Missionary Society, who graphically pictured missionary work in war-ridden China, where he spent 43 years.

Dr. W. L. Smallwood served as toastmaster for last night's brotherhood dinner.

Intruder Knocks Blackboard Over, Jumps Out of Window

Mr. and Mrs. W. I. Russell and Sally. An intruder who entered the Russell residence, 1364 Rittenhouse street northwest, fled after he knocked down Sally's blackboard in the nursery on the second floor

A housebreaker was frightened off last night when he knocked down the blackboard of a 3-year-old girl into whose room he stumbled.

The intruder climbed to the second-floor nursery of the W. I. Russell home, 1364 Rittenhouse street northwest, by means of a 20-foot wooden ladder. Stepping through the window, he struck young Sally Russell's blackboard, which fell with a crash.

Mrs. Hylda Russell dashed up from the kitchen, but the intruder had disappeared.

Police believe he jumped from the second-floor window. A look-out was sent to all hospitals and doctors asking them to report anyone applying for treatment of leg and body injuries.

Russell, a Navy engineer, said he believed the man intended to kidnap Sally. But police held the theory that the man intended to rob the house and had watched it for some time before the attempt was made. Russell had left home earlier in the evening to attend a meeting of the U. S. Army Reserves, in which he is a captain. Mrs. Russell's parents had left the house half an hour before the intruder entered.

First Lady Says War Perils U. S.

No Real Security Seen While Europe Fights; Talks to 500 At Institute

The only sure safeguard for America's peace is "peace everywhere," Mrs. Roosevelt asserted last night.

"Just being at peace all by yourself is not a very safe condition," the First Lady told 500 delegates to the Institute of Human Relations sponsored by the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

"We are a little further away than Holland and Belgium and Sweden, Norway and Denmark and not quite so jittery," she remarked, but she insisted that the United States cannot enjoy real security while the European war continues.

Mrs. Roosevelt, dealing with questions from the audience after her address at the Willard Hotel, warned against a common tendency "to say that none of the peoples wanted war and to blame everything on the leaders."

"Were Not Civilized"

"How can the people escape all responsibility?" she asked. "You have leaders you either choose or tolerate. If you feel strongly enough about it, there are ways you can terminate their leadership."

Asked what stand ministers should take if an "incident" leads this country into war, Mrs. Roosevelt said she believed the Nation has grown too calm and too hardened to propaganda for a single inflammatory episode to bring war.

"But if a time came when Congress and the President felt this country's conscience demanded that it take up arms, and the majority supported them," she continued, "ministers would go with the armed forces—not because they believed in war, but because people were suffering and the church's place was there.

"Of course, it's a sign of lack of civilization when wars came," she added, "and, of course, we're not civilized yet."

Not for Disarmament

Mrs. Roosevelt said she could not advocate unilateral disarmament.

"We've had examples recently of nations not prepared to defend themselves or the agreements they have made," she pointed out. "I do not want my country to find itself in the situation of Munich."

The United States is not justified in "patting itself on the back" simply because "our difficulties do not as yet press on us to a point where we want to take something away from our neighbors," she observed. She said she was not at all sure that if this country were confronted with some of the same material problems as other nations "we would be so sure of our own righteousness."

America's good fortune "gives us a great obligation to think what we could do to promote the realization that people must live more nearly by spiritual ideals," she declared.

Moral Force Stressed

Dr. Frank Kingden, president of the University of Newark, a speaker on the same program, described as "the great issue of our generation" whether "there is in the world a spiritual power mightier than the power men can gather in arms."

He said the moral force of the United States will be a telling influence in the post-war world if this country can remain outside the conflict.

No church can formulate specific peace terms, Dr. John L. McMahon, president of the Catholic Association for International Peace, told the institute, "but every church has the right to insist that the peace be based on principles of justice and charity."

Third speaker in last night's panel on "the Churches and World Peace" was Mrs. Alexander Wolf, vice president of the National Council of Jewish Women.

Dr. Clinchy Speaks

Earlier yesterday delegates heard Dr. Everett R. Clinchy, director of the conference, say that "Americans must safeguard the right to be different, because if we lose the right to be different we also lose the right to be free."

The Rev. Dr. George Johnson, speaking on the role of parochial schools in the American democracy, said these institutions "will make their best contribution to American life to the extent that they make children realize what it means to be a Catholic." Dr. Johnson is director of the Department of Education of the National Catholic Welfare Conference.

"The type of Catholics who cause trouble in the commonwealth are those who don't really understand what their religion is about," he said.

Coughlin Attacked

Father Charles Coughlin's newspaper Social Justice, is "in reality filled with social injustice," an afternoon round table was told by the Right Rev. Mgr. John A. Ryan, director of the Social Action Department of the National Catholic Welfare Conference.

Benning Plans Fight Against Liquor License

Citizens to Hire Attorney to Appear At Hearing Feb. 1

The Benning Citizens Association last night voted to engage an attorney to represent the group at the February 1 hearing of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, when the license petition of a dealer in the 3900 block of Benning road will be presented. The association is protesitng the license.

The association also advocated a lower price for milk sold to schools that have no cafeteria. Another motion urged promotion of a kindergarten for the community.

Miss Susan B. Anthony, of the District Suffrage Association, addressed the meeting.

The association will petition the Federation of Citizens Associations Saturday night to support a movement to classify fuel oil as a utility, it was announced.

Such a grouping was described as an urgent need by Claude A. Wood, president of the association.

Petworth Citizens

The Petworth Citizens Association last night instructed delegates to the federation to support a resolution for a committee to study boundary lines of member groups.

The resolution, introduced by the Piney Branch Association, provides for a committee of seven to investigate all cases in which two or more associations claim the same area. The Petworth citizens also instructed their delegates to aid the Chillum Heights Citizens Association in obtaining a fair hearing on charges against the Hampshire Heights Association that Hampshire Heights should not have been admitted to the federation because it encroached upon Chillum Heights.

The Petworth citizens also indorsed the reorganization of the Fire Department proposed by the Fire Survey Board.

Other action included approval of incorporation for the federation; opposition to the granting of a class C liquor license to a restaurant at 4132 Georgia avenue, and opposition to the expansion of a gas station at Rock Creek Church road and Third street northwest.

The association again urged the Commissioners to make Fifth street a one-way street south from Grant Circle to Rock Creek Church road.

Mondell Speaks

William H. Mondell, president of the District Suffrage Association, last night flayed the District Commissioners for their refusal to incorporate suffrage into plans for a revised local government as "probably the most insulting gesture officious bureaucrats could conceive."

Speaking to the Citizens Forum of Columbia Heights, he urged less spectacular display by local citizens desiring suffrage and a more concerted attempt to educate Congress to the value of a change in local government.

Resolutions included a request that the District income tax be paid in two semiannual installments, and condemnation of reorganization proposals for the removal of Dr. George C. Ruhland as chairman of the Board of Health.

At the same meeting Miss Edith Rockwood, of the Department of Labor, was re-elected vice president. Dr. Russel F. Cahoon and Morgan Sibbett were elected to the new positions of assistant medical director and associate business manager, respectively, and Perry R. Taylor was named secretary-treasurer.

Sibbett joined the Group Health Association recently. He came from San Francisco to begin duties here January 1.

Dr. Garman announced that at the full membership meeting Monday night Miss Rockwood, Robert Shields, of the Department of Agriculture, and himself (Dr. Garman) were reelected to the board of trustees. New board members include Albert H. Aaronson, Social Security Administration; William C. Bowen, Railroad Retirement Board, and Mrs. Edwina V. A. Avery, Department of Agriculture.

The trustees last night approved a proposal to add two doctors to the organization's clinic stag to accommodate increased membership. The net gain of members in 1939 was 268, Dr. Garman reported.

Membership in the G. H. A. at January 1 stood at 2,383. This means, Dr. Garman explained, that 5,600 persons in members' families are getting medical care through the organization.

For three of the last four months the association operated with a surplus, Dr. Garman said.

Bandits Obtain $50 at Laundry, Ice Cream Store

Bandits escaped with $32 yesterday after holdups at a High Ice Cream store, 1771 U street northwest, and a Palace Laundry branch, 1424 New Jersey avenue northwest.

Miss Corrine Sullivan, 2106 N street northwest, refused to hand over the contents of the cash drawer to a colored man at the ice cream store though he threatened her with a revolver.

"Get it yourself," police quoted her as saying. He reached over the counter, scooped up a handful of bills and fled.

In the second holdup, Blanche Platt, manager of the laundry office, surrendered $18 to two colored boys.

Cecil Smith, of 3707 Tenth street northeast, employe of the Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co., died in Alexandria Hospital a half-hour after the crash. James R. Mulligan, 24, of 1303 Wisconsin avenue northwest, suffered face laceration and several teeth were knocked out.

Two children and an elderly woman were injured in traffic accidents here.

Nancy Jane Williams, 7, of 439 Twelfth street northeast, was struck by an auto at Twelfth street and Maryland avenue northeast. She suffered a fracture of the right thigh and was taken to Casualty Hospital. The car, according to police, was driven by Morris J. Cooke, 45, of 29 Buchanan street northeast.

Hit while riding a bicycle near his home, Charles Jeurgens, 8, of 3918 Second street southwest, was treated at St. Elizabeths for lacerations and release. Operator of the auto, police said, was George F. Montgomery, 39, of 1232 Trinidad avenue northeast.

Shafer Seeks To Stabilize Liquor Prices

Introduces Bill to Require Registry Of Retailers' Deals With Wholesalers

A bill designed to give the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board authority to prohibit retail price-cutting in liquor sales and the unemployment compensation act amendments recommended by the District Commissioners were introduced in the House yesterday.

Representative Shafer (Republican), of Michigan, explained his measure would require all local liquor dealers to submit copies of their contracts with wholesale concerns to the ABC Board.

This, in effect, would give the board authority to stabilize prices and outlaw price cutting, he predicted.

He also expressed the opinion that the legislation, if enacted, would give the ABC Board authority to etliminate glaring electric signs, usually displayed by cut-rate stores.

The sponsor of the unemployment compensation act amendments is Representative McGehee (Democrat), of Mississippi, who last year tried unsuccessfully to divorce the local unit from the control of the Social Security Administration.

The plan provides a reduction in the pay roll tax from 3 to 2.7 per cent and an increase in benefits to unemployed from a maximum to $15 weekly for 16 weeks to $20 for 20 weeks. The tax on newspaper carriers is eliminated.

PWA Loan Bill

The District Commissioners yesterday instructed Corporation Counsel Seal to draw up a bill authorizing the local government to repay the Public Works loan with money borrowed at a lower rate of interest from local banking institutions.

The idea originated with Col. David McCoach, jr., Engineer Commissioner, who said the District could save nearly $1,000,000 on the total loan and grant of $18,150,000. Under the PWA loan and grant the District must repay 55 per cent, or $9,982,500, plus interest at 4 per cent. Eventually, the District will have to pay a total of $15,592,873 in principal and interest.

If the District could borrow the money at 1½ per cent, it is estimated the government would save about $200 a day.

Commissioner Allen, although he agreed to have the bill written, holds some fear that the District may get into a bonded debt. However, it has been explained that this project would be restricted specifically to a refunding of a debt already incurred.

Miami Boxers Upset Columbus by One Point

The Washington Post Sports

18 WASHINGTON: WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 17, 1940 X*

Kearns, Down For 9-Count, Earns Draw

Florida Heavy Saves The Day; Early Lead Taken by Visitors; 1,200 Watch Battles

A startling comeback by Tom Kearns, 230-pound Miami University heavyweight, shattered Columbus University's hopes for a successful inaugural of its 1940 boxing season last night in Turner's Arena and gave the Floridians a surprise 4½-to-3½ victory over the Explorers.

The best the fighting Explorers could have hoped for was a draw as the heavyweight bout, the last on the card, came up and when Arthur Lane, Columbus' 190-pound sophomore heavy, unleashed a lethal left hook to the jaw of Kearns it appeared that would be the result.

Kearns floated lazily to the canvas, his eyes glassy, and took a count of nine, then climbed dizzily back to his feet before a howling throng of 1,200—several of whom came in tuxedos and full dress for the occasion.

Kearns Changes Gears

Then came the metamorphosis. Kearns became the raging, relentless fighter and chased Lane all over the ring with arms flailing like pistons. Lane spent the majority of the next two rounds in what resembled a Moslem salaam, his head hidden behind his gloves to ward off the punishing uppercuts swung by Kearns. When it was all over the Miamian had earned a draw.

The victory for the Floridians avenged their defeat Saturday night at the hands of Catholic University and at the same time sounded a warning of double trouble for the Explorers, who went through their 1939 season undefeated. The Columbus fighters have a date with Catholic University February 3.

Explorers Favored

Coach Bill Regan's lads went into the battle as decided underdogs to the supposedly potent Explorer outfit. To top it off they were completing the last leg of a tour which has seen them fight three schools in one week away from their native haunts of Coral Gables, Fla.

But Miami was in a mood to turn the tables, and kept them turned all the way up to the 155-pound class, as far as earned victories were concerned.

In one of the bitterest battles of the night, Charles Cox, the Explorers' star junior middleweight, sent Joe Bonano spinning halfway across the ring with a straight right hand and down for what probably would have been the count, had not the crowd gone wild in its enthusiasm.

Referee Harry Volkman refused to count for fully half a dozen seconds, thus giving Bonano a chance to collect his dazed wits. Cox had to be satisfied with a decision.

Fight Halted

The first local college fight to be halted under the new National Collegiate Association ruling in regard to gashed eyes occurred when Volkman halted the Bud Stern-Will Crum fight and gave it to the Columbus fighter on a decision. Crum cut Stern's eye with a slashing right, the fight was halted and judges ruled that he was leading in points at the time.

With the socre tied, 3-3, Louis Hayman, Columbus' light-heavyweight, went in to start what looked like a victory drive for the Explorers. He chased Red Cameron, of Miami, all around the ring, then tired and dropped the decision.

Miami's "Light Brigade" was lead by Capt. Bunny Lovett, who disdained the offerings of Columbus' Phil Appel in the 120-pound class to wade in and pound out a decision.

Appel went down for a seven count in the second round from a looping righthand punch to the jaw. He sat down firmly on the canvas and was in trouble the remainder of the round. He made a nice comeback against the Miami fighter, who has gone undefeated in two years.

Church Makes Good

Stepping down from the 135-pound class to substitute for his ill teammate, Jerry O'Connell, Joey Church, of Miami, took an easy decision over a willing but inexperienced Leonard Lehrner in the 127-pound class. Church was on the 1936 Olympic team.

George Bach, ordinarily a 145-pounder, filled the 135-pound spot and took a highly unpopular decision over Columbus' Stanley Stephenson, who peppered the Florida puncher almost without cessation. The crowd greeted the decision with a round of jeers.

Trailing 3-0, Columbus took its first point when Miami forfeited in the 145-pound class to Ralph (Buddy) Lazear, Explorer puncher, who has been undefeated in two years of competition.

120 pounds—Bunny Lovett (M.) decisioned Phillip Appel (C.).
127 pounds—Joey Church (M.) decisioned Leonard Lehrner (C.).
135 pounds—George Bach (M.) outpointed Stanley Stephenson (C.).
145 pounds—Ralph Lazear (C.) won by forfeit.
155 pounds—Charles Cox (C.) outpointed Joseph Bonano (M.).
165 pounds—William Crum (C.) won two-round decision over Bud Stern (M.) (Referee halted fight because of Stern's cut eye.)
175 pounds—Red Cameron (M.) outpointed Louis Hayman (C.).
Unlimited—Tommy Kearns (M.) drew with Arthur Lane (C.).

'Kitchener Kinds' Win for Bruins

Montreal, Jan. 16 (AP).—Boston's "Kitchener Kids," Woody Dumart, Milt Schmidt and Bobby Bauer, had another big evening tonight, accounting for half their team's goals and a total of eight points as the Bruins swamped the Montreal Canadiens, 6 to 1. The victory gave Boston a clear hold on first place in the National Hockey League standings, breaking a tie with the idle New York Rangers.

It took the Bruins less than two minutes to score their first goal, and from there on the fifth-place Canadiens never had a look-in.

Fairfax Wins Two

Fairfax boys and girls won at basketball last night. After the boys hung a 34-12 defeat on Herndon, the girls downed the Herndon sextet, 8-6. Butler and Walker led the boys while Miss Young paced the girls.

Eagles Tie Atlantic City, 4-4, in Overtime

Miami Fighter Hits the Canvas . . . Teammate Turns Tide

Right—Joseph Bonano, of Miami, is the lad reclining on the canvas. He was knocked there by the potent right hand of Columbus University's Charles Cox. Solemn-looking gentleman is Referee Harry Volkman, who refused to count until the roaring crowd quieted. Lower—Red Cameron (back to camera), of Miami, plants one of the long rights on the head of Columbus' Louis Hayman in a bout which saw him win and throw the tide of victory to Miami University last night in Turner's Arena

Landis Moves To Wipe Out 'Covering Up'

Commissioner Issues A Drastic Ruling to Stamp Out All Evils

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Jan. 16.—Kenesaw Mountain Landis, commissioner of baseball, laid down the law to organized baseball today in a drastic ruling designed to wipe out illegal "cover-up" player deals between major and minor league clubs.

In a seven-point declaration, Landis ruled that in every future instance of a secret player transfer or similar covert practice he would impose a fine of $500 on the club and outlaw the participating officials, as well as declaring the player involved a free agent.

In addition, Landis warned that a fine of $1,000 would be assessed from a club making any agreement "found to misrepresent or untruthfully report any material fact." Officials executing such a certificate, Landis ruled, also will be placed on the ineligible list.

New Rules and Penalties

Landis' new rulings followed his sensational decision against the Detroit Tigers' farm system—a decision which granted free agency to 91 players, including Major Leaguers Benny McCoy, Tigers' rookie second baseman, valued at $40,000, and Roy Cullenbine, an outfielder bearing a $10,000 price tag.

Commissioner Landis issued these five new rules of conduct and two penalty clauses:

(1) Players must not be signed to blank contracts and a true copy of the contract must be delivered to and left with the player.

(2) Players must not be signed for other clubs, directly or indirectly, whether owned, affiliated or independent.

(3) Players must not be placed with other clubs, except under proper transfer agreements, duly filed for promulgation, which agreements must be optional assignments if the assignor desires to retain a right of acquision exercisable before the player has passed through a selection period at which he is subject to selection.

(4) "Working agreements" must truthfully set forth in the officially filed document "the actual consideration, terms and conditions" of that agreement and there must be no "agreement not embodied in the document as filed."

(5) "Working agreements" must be executed by the club actually

Philadelphia, Jan. 16 (AP).—Signed contracts for the 1940 season were returned to the Athletics today by Sam Chapman, husky young outfielder, and Buck Ross, right-handed pitcher.

Connie Mack has indicated that Chapman, who forwarded his contract from his home at Anaheim, Calif., may be a regular this year. The former University of California football player joined the Athletics in 1938. Ross was brought up to the A's in 1936 from Williamsport of the Eastern League.

Tennessee to Fill Date Left Open by Detroit Withdrawal

By the Associated Press

Charlottesville, Va., Jan. 16.—The University of Virginia football team will play Tennessee at Knoxville on November 16, Norton G. Pritchett, director of athletics, announced today.

Tennessee fills the vacany on Virginia's 1940 schedule left when Chicago withdrew from intercollegiate competition.

The Cavaliers were slated to meet Chicago in a return engagement on that date to complete a two-game series started here last fall. Tennessee had delayed filling that particular date on its schedule.

Frank Murray, Virginia coach, favored a substitution if satisfactory arrangements could be made, and when Pritchett, a Tennessee alumnus, offered a list of prospective opponents, including Tennessee, to the football squad, the players voted overwhelmingly in favor of the Rose Bowl Volunteers.

Tennessee's coach, Maj. Bob Neyland, in discussing the matter with Virginia authorities, expressed his desire to play Virginia. His 1927 Tennessee team defeated the Cavaliers in the only previous game between the two schools.

The revised schedule for 1940:

September 28, Lehigh; October 5, Yale at New Haven; 12, Maryland at College Park; 19, V. M. I.; 26 William and Mary at Williamsburg; November 2, Virginia Tech at Blacksburg; 9, Washington and Lee; 16, Tennessee at Knoxville; 23, North Carolina.

Paavo Nurmi Tour Of U. S. to Help Finns Given Okay

New York, Jan. 16.—Daniel J. Ferris, secretary-treasurer of the Amateur Athletic Union, said today, in a transatlantic telephone call to Helsinki, he had been assured by officials of the Finnish Amateur Athletic Association that approval had been given for a United States tour by Taisto Maki and Paavo Nurmi.

The Finnish officials added that, according to their plans, Maki, world's No. 1 runner at distances from 3,000 to 10,000 meters, and Nurmi, as his manager, would leave Lisbon January 24 by transatlantic clipper.

Ferris asked how much training Maki would need to get into shape for an extended tour, and was told the Finnish ace would require at least three weeks and possibly more. The Helsinki officials also said he would need to train in a warm climate, and plans now are being made to send Maki down South for several weeks.

St. Petersburg, Fla., Jan. 16 (AP).—Top-seeded Elwood Cooke, of Portland, Oreg., and other ranking players today had little difficulty in winning early matches in the Florida West Coast Tennis Tournament.

Winners in men's singles included Ed Alloo, Berkeley, Calif.; Charles Hare, British Davis Cup player, and Henry Prusoff, Seattle.

Touchdown Club Pays Tribute to Grid Heroes

Kinnick, Kimbrough, Herring And Kavanaugh Receive Honors At Annual Athletic Banquet

By Jack Munhall.

Before a distinguished audience including Federal Administrator Jones and Congressmen Carter Glass, Sam Rayburn, John Martin, Vincent Harrington, Tom Connally, Matthew Merrit, Touchdown Club members honored four of the Nation's most publicized 1939 football heroes at a Willard banquet last night.

Nile Kinnick, Iowa halfback; John Kimbrough, Texas A. and M. fullback; Ken Kavanaugh, L. S. U. end, and Don Herring, jr., Princeton tackle who lost his leg after a football injury, received major awards.

Kinnick, chosen as captain of the Walter Camp All-American eleven, was enthusiastically received for his acceptance speech. As talented an orator as he was a halfback for the University of Iowa, Kinnick stole the show as a nonfeatured speaker.

Kinnick, Kimbrough Modest

"When I recall that Davey O'Brien received this trophy last year, and when I realize that I am fortunate enough to apear on the same program as Kimbrough and Kavanaugh and Herring, I am overwhelmed. I cannot tell you how grateful I am to the Touchdown Club for bestowing this great honor upon me."

Kimbrough, in accepting a trophy from Federal Administrator Jesse Jones for "outstanding back of the years," gave forth a blush redder than the tomato salad he had been spearing, and said:

"I certainly do appreciate the great honor that has been bestowed upon me by the Touchdown Club and by Mr. Jones, but I don't know why they picked me over so many fine players."

Not to be outdone in modesty, L. S. U. End Kavanaugh, in taking the first annual Knute Rockne Trophy from C. U. Football Coach A. J. (Dutch) Bergman, drawled in his best Texan dialect:

"Golly, what can I say in acceptance of such a great honor when a player like Kimbrough is conscience-striken at accepting his trophy. All I can say is if Kimbrough ever ran over you en route to the goal line you'd have no doubt about his right to any recognition paid him."

Augusta Girl Golf Leaders Tied With 170

Helen Dettweiler And Helen Harb Post Same Scores to Lead

By the Associated Press

Augusta, Ga., Jan. 16.—A pair of professionals with 36-hole cards of 170 were cast in a race for the championship of the 1940 women's title-holders golf tournament here today.

Helen Dettweiler, of Washington, D. C., the leader at the end of the first 18 yesterday, saw Helen Hicks Harb, Long Island, fashion a second-round 83 today while the former was one over at 84 to gain a tie at the halfway mark of the four-day, 72-hole medal play tourney.

Blonde Jean Bauer, Providence, R. I., could do no better than duplicate her opening 87, 12 over par, to hold down third place in the field of a half-dozen performers. She had been tied with Mrs. Hard for second at the end of the first day's play.

Mrs. Helen Hicks Harb, Long Island, 87-83—170.

Helen Dettweiler, Washington, 86-84—170.

Jean Bauer, Providence, 87-87—174.

Mrs. L. G. Pray, Washington, D. C., 92-92—184.

Elizabeth Dunn, Indianapolis, Ind., 97-93—190.

Deadlock Earns Locals Single Point In Eastern League, Two Behind Rovers

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Overtime hockey was introduced to 2,200 Eastern Amateur League fans last night at Riverside Stadium when the Washington Eagles wasted leads of 3-0 and 4-2 and finished in a 4-all deadlock with the Atlantic City Seagulls. The Eagles picked up one point by the tie and now trail the leading New York Rovers by 2 points.

The visitors turned loose a third-period offensive that netted four scores and tied the game with less than four minutes to play. The Eagles scored three times in the opening period and once in the fourth, between the Gulls tallies.

The second period was a scoreless affair as was the fast 10 minutes overtime period.

The boys roughed it up in both the second and third 20-minute periods with 210-pound Reds Storey and Villian Phil Vitale drawing the boos of the local fans while the Eagles' fighting was apparently more of a defensive measure.

The Eagles were short-handed, with Alan Kuntz out with a broken arm, Len Burrage with a bad leg, and their extra man that was supposed to arrive yesterday, Bunny McKillop, failing to put in an appearance. In addition, Bill Cairns suffered a deep gash in his leg in the first period and played only a few minutes after that.

The honest to goodness battling honors went to Ed Powers, of the Seagulls, and Johnny McTeer, of the Eagles, who slugged it out in a swing period and each drew five minute penalties assignments. In the third period, Les Ramsay picked on Evitale but it was a one-sided affair and Ramsay was the only one penalized. Vitale drew three penalty sessions for the Gulls. The rest of the roughing affected Referee Magoffin who was knocked over the wall once and banged against it on other occasions.

Storey and Burns were the visitors that led the third period attack, the former with two scores and the latter with two assists while Fasano and Tustin also hit the point column, with two of the tallies within six seconds of each other.

P. G. A. Senior Golf Won by Hackbarth

By the Associated Press

Sarasota, Fla., Jan. 16.—Otto Hackbarth, 54-year-old Cincinnati golf professional, today won the National P. G. A. Senior Championship by defeating 57-year-old Jock Hutchison, of Chicago, on the eighteenth hole of their second playoff match.

Hackbarth and Hutchison, former United States and British Open champion, tied for top honors with 146 at the end of the regular tournament here Sunday. Yesterday's 18-hole playoff found them still deadlocked at 220.

The Ohio professional was 1 up at the end of today's first nine holes, which he shot in 37, or 1 over par for the outgoing half of the course. They finished the seventeenth all square, but Hutchison sliced his second shot on the eighteenth and needed a par 5, while Hackbarth was in the cup with a 4. That gave Hackbarth a score of 220, 74—294, and the title.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

When the Nation's football experts selected Dr. Eddie Anderson, of Iowa, as the coach of the year in a near-unanimous vote last month, they chose well but they were tardy by 17 years.

It was an honor that belonged to Anderson back in 1922 when he was a fresh young graduate of Notre Dame setting forth on his coaching career at a little Iowa Catholic school named Columbia College. At least there is solid evidence to that effect.

POVICH

On the dais at the Touchdown Club dinner last night a reformed sports editor sat with Anderson, triumphantly listening to the kudos heaped on the Iowa coach. Because long ago, the Rev. Maurice Sheehy, former football writer and famed now as the head of the Department of Religious Education at Catholic University, had scented the coaching talents of the many they were now acclaiming.

Hailed widely for his services on a recent good-will tour of South America, mapped for him by the State Department and the observations he made after a hurried trip to England following the outbreak of the war, Father Sheehy last night was deep in another of his favorite callings—college football.

He Started From Scratch With a Green Team

First sponsor of Eddie Anderson as a coach was Father Sheehy, then athletic director at Columbia College. No athletic director ever achieved what proved to be such an illustrious beginning. Because Father Sheehy's first act of his new office was to appoint as Columbia College's head coach the young man who had captained Notre Dame's 1921 team as end.

"I may have been swayed," Father Sheehy smiling relates last night "by the fact that Eddie Anderson was from my home town in Iowa. Of course we all followed Notre Dame's play and Anderson impressed me as a smart football player. I wondered then if he were coaching material. Suspecting that he was, I asked Knute Rockne. In effect, Rockne told me to 'grab him.'"

Anderson's success at Columbia was virtually instantaneous, according to Father Sheehy. In his first year, Eddie took a green team and defeated all of our class of smaller colleges. It wasn't until the last game of the season that we had what you might call a let-down. Eddie's team won the game, 52-6, but as I was saying it was still something of a let-down. You see, that was the first time we were scored upon.

Eddie Was Forced to Invade Touch Game Ranks

"Columbia, or Loras College as it is now known, had a student body of only 300 students, you must understand, and Eddie had to start from scratch. Over half his varsity team had never played football in high school. I remember distinctly that Eddie drafted one little 125-pounder from a touch football game he saw on the campus. The next week that fellow was Eddie's regular quarterback and scored twice on 60-yard runs. That lad earned All-Western mention from Walter Eckersall before he was out of Columbia."

Under Anderson, Father Sheehy recited, little Columbia actually became too expert for the Iowa Conference and was forced to seek competition outside the State. "But we were out of luck if we had injuries. Eddie had only one substitute for each position, and in one season he played three consecutive games using only 11 men. There was a day once when he had only 16 men in uniform against Detroit University but we had a 3-0 lead going into the final quarter. Then accidents began to happen and we had a guard playing halfback and an end playing tackle and lost the game, 19-3."

There is no mystery whatsoever in Anderson's success, Father Sheehy was saying. "He's simply teaching the kind of football he played himself. His football players block the way he shows them to block, and they tackle in the manner that Eddie himself tackled. You know the story of Anderson and Red Grange?"

They Knew He Was 'Coach of Year' in 1922

We would like to hear it, we assured him, and Father Sheehy told it simply enough. "Anybody can ask Grange about Eddie Anderson," he said. "They were both playing pro football in Grange's first year as a pro. Grange caught a punt and started up field. It was the last time he ever played safety man in pro football. Anderson tackled him so hard that Grange's manager would never let him catch another punt. Grange has always said that Anderson hit him harder and better than any man who ever tackled him."

Five years ago when Holy Cross sought a football coach, Father Sheehy was approached by the Holy Cross athletic director. "Your man," said Father Sheehy, "is Eddie Anderson." He was eminently correct in that statement. Under Anderson, Holy Cross stood fifth in the Nation over a five-year period in games won and lost.

"I could guarantee Holy Cross that Anderson was a good football coach," said Father Sheehy, "but I couldn't guarantee that he wouldn't outgrow Holy Cross football. And at Iowa, his first-year success was not exactly surprising to me. You see, we knew he was actually coach of the year back in 1922."

Lion Pro Grid Team Sold for $200,000

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Jan. 16.—Fred L. Mandel, jr., 31-year-old scion of a wealthy Chicago department store family, and two associates today purchased the Detroit Lions of the National Professional Football League for a reported price of $200,000.

Announcement of the sale, rumored for several days, was made simultaneously by Mandel in Detroit and by George A. Richards, former owner of the team, at Beverly Hills, Calif. Richards, well-to-do radio station owner, bought the Portsmouth, Ohio, franchise in the pro circuit in 1934 for approximately $15,000 and transferred it to Detroit.

In announcing purchase of the Lions (which is still subject to approval of other clubs in the league) Mandel also said that George (Potsy) Clark, original Lion coach, would return to Detroit as head coach of the team. Clark, who was ousted by the Brooklyn Dodgers recently after two poor seasons, received a one-year contract, Mandel said. He also is expected to serve in an executive capacity.

Mandel said that he owned the controlling interest in the new organization and that Anthony I. (Tony) Owen and Charles Chaplin, both of New York, were minority stockholders. William A. Alfs, vice president under Richards, and P. M. Thomas, former treasurer, will continue with the club in executive capacities, Mandel said. Owen is a former advertising executive, while Chaplain has been connected with the New York Giants, of the National Football League, for ten years.

Mandel said that the contract of Elmer C. (Gus) Henderson, coach of the Lions last fall, was not included in the purchase. Henderson has two years to go on a three-year contract. He is at Los Angeles, Calif., for the winter.

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

New York, Jan. 16.—The kernel of that unsavory trouble at Detroit is that Jack Zeller, who runs the Tigers' farm-lands, loaded himself up with more ballplayers than he had ball clubs on which to place them.

So he chose the wrong way out. Instead of buying a few down and out minor league teams, and putting his excess players on them (as the Yanks would do) he "sold" them to clubs in the same leagues in which Detroit had teams. That was all well and good. We learn though that he "sold" them with the understanding that if their new club ever sold them to another club, Detroit would get the money.

CONSIDINE

Thus, in effect, he was only renting out some of his minor leaguers. That doesn't exactly come under the head of heinous crimes. It probably has been done before in baseball. The danger lies in just how many such mercenaries, or leased players, were shunted from the parent team to another team. If the parent team "sold" enough of them to one club it soon virtually controlled that team, or foe. In other words the parent club more or less owned a segment of its competition.

Local Baseball Men Were Shocked

It came as a shock to local baseball men to learn that Detroit controlled Fort Worth as well as Beaumont, in the Texas League. That's patently a bad thing, for inevitably the time would come when Fort Worth would be tempted to lay down to Beaumont, or vice versa, to boost the higher-riding club into a pennant. Even if Fort Worth and Beaumont played against each other as ferociously as the Dodgers do against the Giants, there would be those who looked with a cynical leer upon the proceedings—and that would be an unhappy state of affairs in the most honestly played game in the country.

We have heard farm-team men say that it is almost impossible to obey Landis' farm rules, because the "Old Jedge" places confusing interpretation of certain of his written words. We hear, too, from the president of a ranking minor league, that Zeller was interested only in helping out the teams he sent his excess players to; that in no case did he hope to soften up the rivals of the legitimately controlled Tiger farm. That's hardly a defense. The Yanks, with more important farm holdings than all the others, manage to obey Landis' rules to Landis' satisfaction. Even if Zeller was acting altruistically, his deed was worthy of suspicion on no other grounds than that baseball men avoid altruism like the plague. He probably pulled only a bonehead, or, at worst, a dull piece of sharp practice.

Trout Had Visions of Himself on Block

The emancipation of the baseball toilers, and the aftermath story in which Dizzy Trout learned that he was not one of those named free agents, must have been severe blows to Trout and Wally Moses, the Philadelphia outfielder. Trout was envisioning himself as another Tom Henrich (who sold himself to the Yanks for $20,000 after Landis cut him loose from Cleveland, Moses, who had been wasting his fragrance in the desert air of the Philadelphia outfield for several years, at long last had gotten himself traded to the Tigers in a deal involving one of the Tigers now declared a free man. The deal must be called off.

Moses had been trying to get away from Philadelphia for several years, and itched for the chance to play with a team that was going somewhere. He thought that at last he was in the groove, but it turned out to be the same old rut. Trout goes back to the Tiger roster, a fact that must irk him considerably. The slightly garrulous gent who had been rubbing his hands in fond expectation of selling himself ("ball clubs always pay too much for free agents," a great farm-overseer told us yesterday) now finds himself just another kid with a less than .500 pitching average. We feel sorrier for Moses, for he may have lost his last chance to get the dough and the incentive he never had.

What to Do About Nats Puzzles Landis

Landis has a touchy situation now confronting him. He must decide what to do about the Washington and St. Louis Cardinals ball clubs, which apparently contacted Trout by phone immediately it was announced that the pitcher (who stopped the Yanks' 12-game winning streak last year) had been named a free agent. Trout's sister was quoted as saying the clubs had been in touch with her brother. On Monday Landis decided that Trout was legitimately a Tiger and took his name off the list. It is against baseball rules to offer a free agent a job for two weeks after he is pronounced a free agent, but the Senators and Cardinals were beating the gun, apparently. Was Trout a free agent when they did call him—inasmuch as the next day it was decided that he wasn't? Landis fined the Cubs and Browns a total of $1,500 for approaching McCoy and Cullenbine, two other Tigers made free agents, before Landis formally pronounced them free.

Some day we would like to get a play-by-play account of what Walter O. Briggs, sr., the gouty old industrialist, said to Zeller and to Walter O. Briggs, jr., when he heard the news. We probably couldn't print it in this lovable old family newspaper, but it would make us a fortune in the private-consumption publishing field.

Central Upsets Eastern, 24-21; Roosevelt Wins

Riders Take Series Lead by Defeating McKinley, 37-20

Central High Gets Away to Flying Start to Turn Back Defending Champions on Tech Floor; 2,000 See Roosevelt Hang Up Second Series Victory

Forgetting for 32 minutes that it wasn't supposed to be a good basketball team, Central High's club registered the most sensational upset of the interhigh series yesterday when it issued a 24-21 licking to Eastern, the defending champion, at Tech Gym. At the same time, Roosevelt, playing on its home floor, went into uncontested leadership of the series with a 37-20 shellacking of McKinley. It was the Riders' second league triumph, though Central's first in a pair of games.

Roosevelt Triumphs

Unlimbering their shooting arms, Roosevelt High's crack basketeers held "target practice" yesterday at Tech's expense as the Rough Riders crushed McKinley before a capacity crowd of 2,000.

In climbing to the league leadership the Riders used some highly efficient foul shooting as the stepping stone. In all, Roosevelt converted seven of nine free throws and it was not until only four minutes of play remained that a Rider missed from the 15-foot mark.

Roosevelt stepped out in the first half as if it were preparing to make a runaway of the contest but the plucky Tech team staged a stubborn comeback in the second half. It was only midway in the final period when Roosevelt held a 25-17 advantage that the Riders awoke to the proximity of the invaders.

Then, with George West, Roosevelt's blond bombshell, and Ernie Travis, burly center, leading the way, the Riders put on an amazing display of power as they pumped 15 points through the cords while holding the Techites to a field goal and foul throw.

West opened the scoring with a free throw, his first of five, but "Dutch" Teeple countered with a long shot to give Tech the only lead it held throughout the game.

Hymie Perlo & Co. found the range at this juncture and began dropping points through the hoop with monotonous regularity as they compiled a 12-6 lead at the end of the first quarter.

The Riders completely dominated play in the second quarter, ringing up 10 points while Tech was able to count only 4 markers, giving Roosevelt a 22-10 lead at recess.

The Manual Trainers were treated to one of Coach Bruce Kessler's stinging intermission speeches and their play, especially in the late stages of the third period, reflected the burn. Jack Walsh, one of the mighty midgets, was the mainspring in a drive which brought Tech within 10 points of overtaking the hosts as the quarter ended.

Although he scored only four points, Buddy Webb, 245-pound center, was a constant source of annoyance to the Rider defense. He broke up many scoring plays involving Travis as its hub and offensively figured prominently in whatever attack Tech was able to muster.

George West led the day's scoring with 11 points. Travis figured a close second with 8 points, although he did not find the range until the fourth quarter.

Eastern Is Upset

That Eastern was expected to take the Mount Pleasanters into camp without taking a deep breath was attested by the hordes of schoolboy fans who didn't turn out for the game. The Tide, after a warm-up victory over Anacostia, was slated to annex its second victory in defense of its crown by at least 15 points.

Central proved itself as unpredictable as ever by holding a 6-5 edge after one quarter, a 12-10 margin at the half, and a 16-14 edge after three quarters. Even then the select gathering expected Eastern to stage its usual last-ditch uprising and win without a struggle. It was Central which was the better stretch runner.

Thomaides Stars

To little Teddy Thomaides went credit for the most important points of the game, those three that made the difference between victory and an overtime. With less than a minute left to play, the score knotted at 21-21, Teddy stood at the foul line for one shot. Like a veteran he made good. When he took Charley Kligman's pass a few seconds later and converted a perfect "snow bird," it didn't make any difference about the winner but it let Central fans breathe easier.

Those 3 points by Thomaides, as a matter of fact, nullified a Central blunder that might have lost the game. Out in front by a 21-20 count, a Blue player called for the team's sixth time out, a technical foul. Bob Custer tied up the score with the free throw allowed.

Besides his game-winning points, young Thomaides shared point honors with Eastern's Custer for the game. Each had 9. The other individual star of the upset was Kligman, who scored the Blue's first 4 points and 7 for the game. He paced a passing offense that was at best weak, despite the fact it won.

Forced to Long Shots

Central was forced to make most of its points from outside the foul line. The touted "fast break" of the Blue was considerably less than speedy and when the ball was finally worked under the basket it was passed out again for long-range shots.

Shortly before Thomaides' hot streak near the close of hostilities, Central's chances took a sudden turn downward when, with the count 21-20 in its favor, Thomaides fouled Nick Di Pierto in a scramble under the Tide goal. With the chance to tie the count or go into the lead, Di Pietro missed both shots.

The victory put Central even with the Easterners in the race, just behind Roosevelt and along side Wilson and Western. Anacostia and Tech trail with two losses apiece.

Cards Seek 1st Victory In W. Md. Clash

Loser of 4 in Row, C. U. Five Is Just Rounding Into Shape

Catholic University will attempt to break its perfect basketball record of four defeats in as many games tonight with Western Maryland's Green Terrors at the Brookland gymnasium at 8:15 o'clock.

Hindered by lack of practice because of the fact that most of the team is composed of football players who made the New Year's trip to El Paso's Sun Bowl, the Cards are rounding into shape and should give a better account of themselves tonight, Coach Fod Cotton believes.

The Cards went into action against Loyola of Baltimore with but three days practice and then took on a heavy program of three games in Pennsylvania against Duquesne, St. Vincent and St. Francis, whose teams have been drilling since November.

The Terrors' big gun will be Irving Biasi, who accounted for 18 points against Georgetown recently. He will be at guard, along with Stropp and Honeman and Evans will be at forward positions and Faw at center.

For C. U., Sachon and Carrig will be at forwards, Pirro at center, and Daly and White at guards. Every man in the starting lineup, but Daly went to the Sun Bowl, but the Cardinals realize they have worn the football alibi thin and will be out to win tonight. The Cardinal freshmen quintet will face Northeast Boys Club in a preliminary game.

Maryland U. Favored Over Georgetown Five

Ritchie Coliseum Scene of Clash Tonight; Terps Seek Seventh Victory of Season; Hilltop Coach to Start Revised Line-Up

The University of Maryland basketball team, winner of six of eight starts, will rule a slight choice over Georgetown tonight in the sixth annual renewal of their modern series. Although it is Georgetown's home game, the contest will be played at Ritchie Coliseum, College Park, at 8:30 o'clock.

Georgetown, defeated in its last four games and in five of seven starts, is hopeful of snapping back on the victory trail. A prime incentive is the extension of the Hoyas' court supremacy over the Terrapins, G. U. has won for the last three years and boasts 4-1 edge in the five games played with Maryland.

Although Maryland will have the advantage of playing on its home court tonight history indicates that Georgetown teams have had no trouble accustoming themselves to the College Park gym. Maryland has never beaten Georgetown at College Park, the Terps winning their lone victory at Tech in 1936.

Georgetown will start a revised lineup, including a pair of sophomores. Al Lujack, one of the fledglings, returns to center after one game forward. Sophomore Buddy O'Grady, a highly touted youngster in whom Coach Elmer Ripley has great faith, will team with veteran George Pajak at forwards. Capt. Johnny Schmitt and Irving Rizzi will start at guards.

The starting Maryland lineup probably will list George DeWitt and Mearle Duvall at forwards; Charley Weidinger at center and Milton Mulitz and Pershing Mondorff at guards. Duvall is the lone sophomore among the regular five.

In a 7 o'clock preliminary the Georgetown freshman five will meet Jewish Community Center.

Season Marks To Lutheran Loop Bowlers

St. Paul's Team and Hering Get Records; Other Alley News

St. Paul five, of the Lutheran Church Men's League, checked in a new season record for team sets last night at Arcadia Alleys, 1749, and not to be outdone a new season record was hung up by the Lutheran Church Ladies League when Dorothy Hering, of Keller Memorial, rolled an individual set of 360.

In the men's section John Middlekauff, of St. Paul No. 2, had high game and set, 156 and 395, and Lutheran Place won team game honors with 590.

Keller Memorial swept the ladies division with high individual game, 136, by Anna May Poor, and team game and set for 512 and 1479.

In the Railroad Retirement Board League the Diplomats proved outstanding for the evening, Ann Meca rolling the best game, 129, and Ann Shannon rolling best set, 331. The team combined for a 481 game and 1,368 set

ICE PALACE

Lynn Watwood, a 104 average roller, paced the Pure Food team to a three-game sweep over Cherner Motors to take the Chevy Chase Commercial League lead. Watwood rolled 156 and 419, and the team had 1,771 for high set. Royal Tavern's 668 game stole honors in that department.

QUEEN PIN

Service Station clung to its two-game lead in the Diamond Cab League by taking all three games from Union Station. Northeast stole into second place when "Slim" Schmid rolled 124-348 to help in a whitewashing of Concessions. Charlie Smith had 130 and 375 for top individual game and set.

LUCKY STRIKE

Two season's records were broken in the Agriculture Forest, Mixed League. Joe Santucci rolled the new highs of 151 and 393 as his team the Beeches took two games from the Birches. Alice McQuinn's 337 was the women's high. Her team, the Pines, took two from Basswood.

In the newly organized Bandmasters League, Madrillon swamped Lotus and Meyer Davis took two from Bamboo Gardens. Hugh Barterman, Jimmy Bright and Harry Blum were the stars.

Season's records in the Ladies Catholic League were set by Miss Dries, who rolled 138 and 357 as Holy Comforter A downed St. Joseph twice. St. Francis set a new mark with a 565 game while taking two from Holy Comforter C.

Petworth Travels

Petworth A. C. basketball team, of the Heurich amateur league, will play Warrenton in Warrenton, Va., tonight at the high school gymnasium at 8:15 o'clock. The Treasury Department girls team will meet Warrenton girls' sextet in a preliminary.

Perrell Hero As Western Wins, 22-21

G. W. High Defeated By Free Throw in Second Extra Period

"Hop" Perrell, Western High's claimant to the "jitterbug championship" of the District, gave Raider basketers a thrilling 22-21 victory over George Washington High, of Alexandria, yesterday when he stepped up to the foul line in the second overtime period and sank a free throw. It was his first and only point of the game at Western gym.

In annexing their seventh favorable decision of the year, against a single setback, the Raiders survived one of the roughest games District schoolboys have staged. A pair of players from each club was sent to the bench with four personal fouls, Western losing Johnny Lumpkin and Jake Hilleary and the Alexandrians losing Clift and Snyder.

G. W. in Front

Though out in front by 16-12 at the half, Western sagged in the next two periods and allowed G. W. a 21-19 edge with less than a minute of the game left. Then it was lanky Hal Mitchell, who gave the Raiders their chance for the spectacular finish when he ripped the cords from center court. Simultaneous with the time-keepers final gun, Jimmy Karas hurled with everything he had for another basket, though the effort was ruled a split second late.

Mitchell missed a chance to win the game in the first overtime when his foul throw rimmed the hoop and fell out.

Scoring honors were captured by Western's Lumpkin before he was waved out. He tallied eight points, half of them from the foul line. Karas, of Western, and G. W's Chislom ran second with six each.

Mayo, 126-lb. Titlist, Defends Gloves Crown

Alexandrian Meets Ditota In Senior Bout on Tonight's Amateur Card at Arena

Gilbert Mayo, sandy-haired star of the St. Mary's Club boxing team from Alexandria, tonight begins the defense of his 126-pound laurels in the seventh annual Golden Gloves Tournament at Turner's Arena.

The Golden Gloves committee, meeting last night at Knights of Columbus, paired the featherweight champion with Tony DiTota, hard-hitting Police Boys Club, No. 5, challenger, in one of three senior bouts on the card. More than 30 seniors weighed in and were examined.

In other senior matches Jim Perrow, 147-pound National Guard entry, meets Billy DeZerne, of Police Boys Club, No. 10, and Larry Jacobs, unattached light-heavyweight, will engage Bill Nolan, rugged National Guard boxer.

Mayo is one of eight defending titleholders in the tournament, and faces no easy assignment in DiTota. The Alexandrian, however, will be favored, as he has won three Golden Gloves and two A. A. U. titles.

Nine novice matches are on tap—one in the 118-pound, two in the 126-pound, three in the 135-pound, one in the 147-pound and two in the 160-pound divisions.

A Chinese youngster, Stanley Lee, of Central High School, will make his bow in the 135-pound class, meeting Tommy Johns, of St. Mary's.

An old-fashioned swinging battle is expected when Pasquale Iacangelo, of Police Boys Club, No. 10, meets Ray Mason, Merrick 160-pounder. The first bout begins at 8:30.

Tuffy Leemans to Second White at Arena Tomorrow

The lure of the athletic spotlight and the fact that his old teammate, Tarzan White, is wrestling, will draw Tuffy Leemans, star back of the New York Giants pro football team, to Turner's arena again tomorrow night in a second's role.

Tuffy will work in the corner of White, hefty tackle for the Giants, who will swap groans with Ralph Garibaldi on the card featuring Joe Cox and Ernie Dusek. He was Tarzan's second when the latter defeated Chief White Feather recently.

Other supporting roles on the card will be filled by Tom Casey and Gus Sonnenberg, Dartmouth All-America football tackle of 1921; Tommy O'Toole and Abie Coleman and Lou Plummer and Alan Eustace.

Delta Gamma Girls Beaten, 13-9, Amid Cries of 'Man in the House'

Moving of Piano Could Have Been Factor in Defeat By Alpha Phi Gals

By Al Hailey
(the Man in the House)

It might have been that piano somebody kept pushing across the floor, then again it could have been blamed on those whoops of "men in the house"—anyway, the sorority basketball championship of American University flew right out of the hands of undefeated Delta Gamma yesterday.

Scene of the Delta Gamma downfall was the gymnasium of a large structure known as the Women's Residence Hall, and according to sources close to those in position to know, the Alpha Phi girls triumphed, 13 to 9.

Frankly, Your Correspondent was never able to get close to those in position to know, for every foray into a different section of the hall was hailed by the strange feminine shrieks of "man in the house."

It developed that men are not ordinarily found in the Women's Residence Hall.

The Alphas took the lead from the Gammas at the start—but the Gams should protest about that piano.

Along about the middle of the game, a number of determined young women in white trundled out a large mahogany instrument and solemnly pushed it across the court just as the Gammas were enjoying a brief timeout.

In most leagues this action is grounds for immediate complaint, as the sight of a piano rolling by is apt to unnerve a high-strung player. But nothing was said—not a Gamma

Unerring Takes Hialeah Park Feature in Blanket Finish

Strong Ride By Paul Ryan Beats Field

Dolly Val Is Beaten At Wire; One Jest Finishes Half Length Back in Kissimmee

By the Associated Press

Hialeah Park, Fla., Jan. 16.—Unerring, generally regarded as the best 3-year-old filly in 1939, began her 1940 campaign with a victory in the featured Kissimmee Purse here this afternoon. The brown daughter of Insco, which races for Herbert M. Woolf's Woolford Farm, made her own pace in the 7-furlong event for fillies and mares but needed a strong ride by Paul Ryan to score by a head in 1:24.

James Emery's Dolly Val was second in the blanket finish, a half length before W. C. Winfrey's One Jest. Parscout and Flying Lee were next in the bunched battle to the wire, with Ghost Queen a short distance back and Harp Weaver bringing up the rear.

Unerring, which last year won five out of 13 races and $13,450, was a $5.60 for $2 favorite with the good-sized crowd, which came prepared with coats and furs for the second chilly afternoon in a row.

Unerring turned in a game performance for her first effort since November. She had Ghost Queen right at her side into the last furlong, where the latter hoisted the distress signal. Dolly Val, a seasoned mare, had been rated close behind. She took up the chase in the final drive, but Unerring held her ground. One Jest barely staved off Parscout and Flying Lee.

Bridgewater Beats Wilson Five, 40-37

Harrisonburg, Va., Jan. 16 (AP).—The Bridgewater Eagles staved off a great last-half spurt by the Wilson Teachers, of Washington, tonight to triumph, 40 to 37.

Bridgewater piled up an early lead, being ahead 24 to 14 at the half. The Eagles widened the margin to 30-15 early in the second half. Then Wilson, paced by Ishin and Gilliam, began to click and was threatening to knot the count when the game ended.

Dixon Shull and D. Miller were outstanding for Bridgewater.

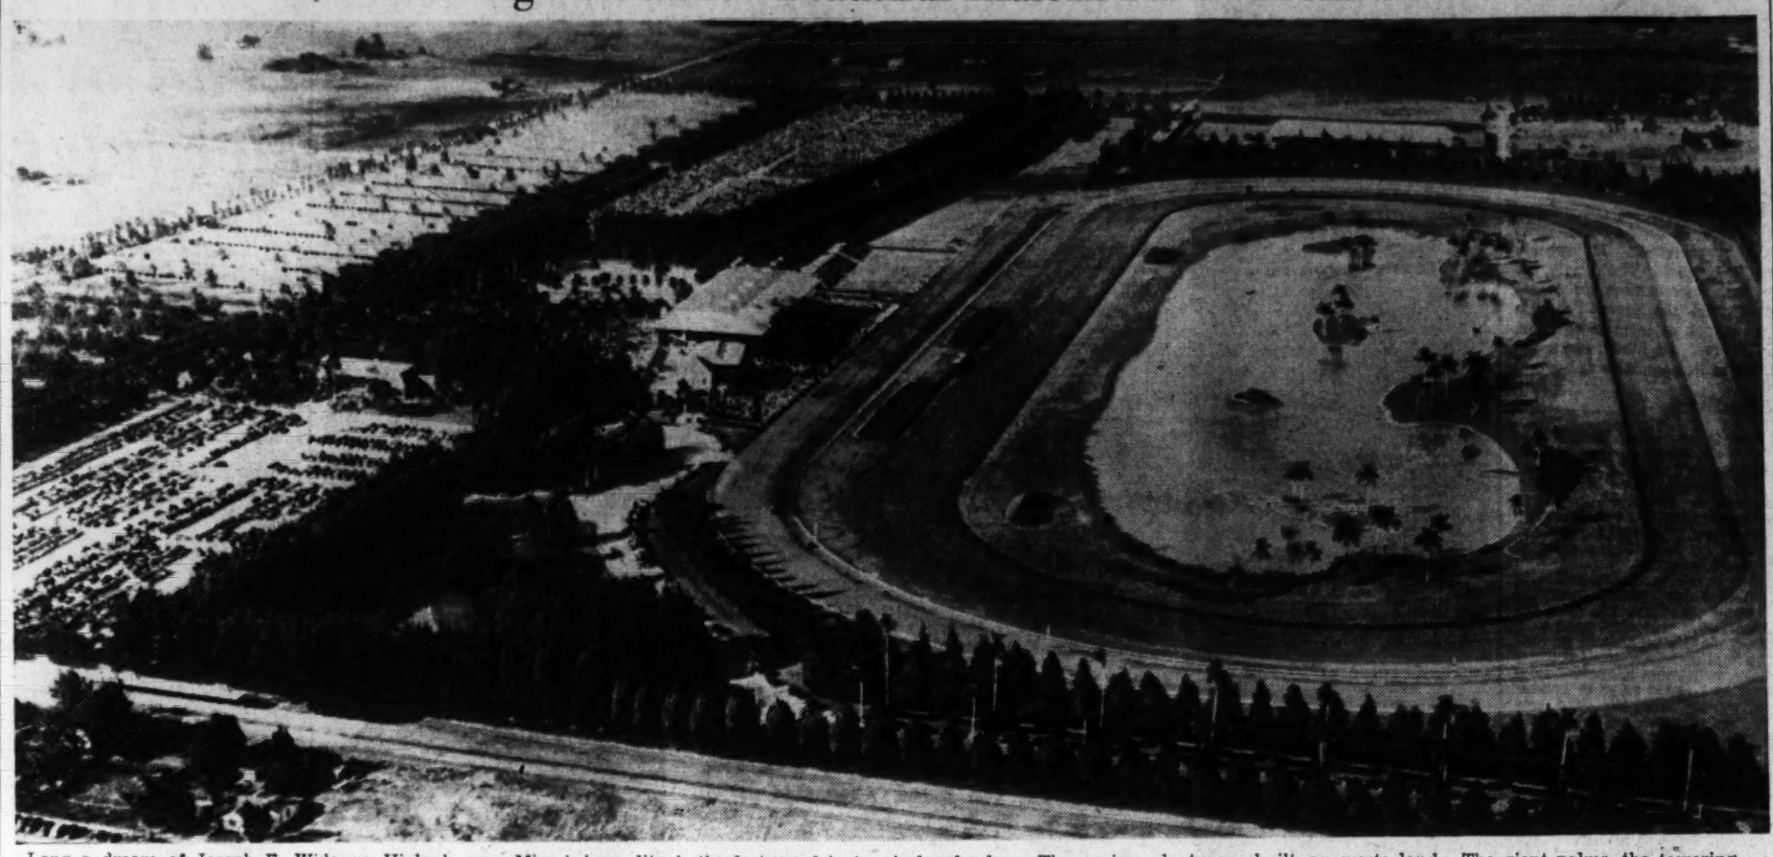
This Is Racing's Paradise—Beautiful Hialeah Park—From the Air



Long a dream of Joseph E. Widener, Hialeah, near Miami, in reality is the last word in tropical splendor. The racing plant was built on waste land. The giant palms, the towering Australian pines, the flowered vines were all brought to their present home from long distances. Even the infield lake, home of the famous flock of flamingoes, is the work of man

OH OH, began fast, drew clear while racing straight and, responded with determination when the final issue came to hold GENERAL JACK safe. The latter, well up, but tried to bear out in the early running and Rosen had difficulty straightening him out. LOCHLEA, under pressure all the way, faltered slightly through the stretch. ARESTINO raced on the extreme outside all the way. PACIFIER was troubled when the start came.

RISENFLY, going well up on the outside under light restraint, closed gamely to vigorous urging through the stretch and got up in the last stride. MANAMAID set a steady pace while being rated in front and saving ground just failed to last. UGIN, a keen factor throughout, continued courageously under punishment to outlast LITTLE RHODY. The latter displayed good speed, but hung right at the end.

BETTY'S BOBBY, well up on the outside all the way, made a game effort, but could not reach the winner. ARGONNE WOODS showed good speed while saving ground, but faltered in the last furlong. BLIND IMPULSE was under extreme urging from the start.

UNERRING, displaying excellent speed, raced GHOST QUEEN into submission in the early running and continued with determination when it came to a drive to outlast DOLLY VAL. The latter, a forward contender on the inside, moved up gamely when straightened in the stretch, but ran into close quarters, closed fast when clear, but could not reach the leader. ONE JEST, hard ridden, finished strong. PARSCOUT finished with a belated rush.

LIBERTY ANN, well handled, followed the pace under restraint until approaching the furlong pole assumed command with a rush and opened up a winning lead to win as her rider pleased. BLACK TIME, prominent throughout, took a brief lead through the stretch, but faltered and just lasted to stave off ANTI AIR'S bid. The latter finished strong on the outside in the final drive. SASSY MATE quit. MERRY ONIG and SWING BAND could never get up.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles (on the turf). Purse, $1,100; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Puett gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 5:40. Off 5:41. Wheat Drops With Better Crop Outlook

Chicago, Jan. 16.—Selling pressure developed weakness in the wheat pit today after a brief opening upturn and prices tumbled as much as 1¾ cents a bushel.

Less tension abroad, reports of improved prospect for the domestic winter wheat crop and weakness at Buenos Aires prompted selling that carried prices down steadily. May contracts fell to 98⅞, off 1⅝, and Julffiy to 96½, off 1¾, before recovering partly. A break of nearly 5 cents in soybeans and weakness at Kansas City and Minneapolis, where wheat was down 1⅞ and 2 cents at times, contributed to the downturn.

Wheat on the board of trade closed ⅞-1⅜ under yesterday's finish. May 99⅛-99⅜, July 96⅞-97; corn ⅜-⅝ down, May 58, July 58⅛; oats ¼-⅜ lower; soybeans 3¾-4 cents down; rye ½-1 cent lower; lard unchanged to 3 cents a hundredweight higher.

Young Bankers Challenged By New Problems

J. S. Brown, of N. Y. Chemical Bank, Talks At A. I. B. Dinner

By Thomas M. Cahill.

National and world problems are also those of the young banker, members of Washington Chapter, American Institute of Banking, were told last night by J. Stanley Brown, personnel director, Chemical Bank & Trust Co., New York City. Addressing a dinner meeting of the chapter's educational committee at the Raleigh Hotel, the speaker said, in part, that so far as troubles of the world and the United States are concerned, these problems are theirs for two reasons.

"In the first place," he explained, "you constitute the future banking leadership in this, the nerve center, of our Nation. And, in the second place, you have met this evening for consideration of ways and means for the meeting of certain problems which you will face in the next six months and—by inference at least—for consideration of basic problems affecting your whole careers and lives."

But young people, he reminded, will never qualify for competent consideration of world, national, or professional problems, until they have first conquered certain personal ones. When the world turns topsy-turvy and the future appears uncertain, one has to choose between negative and cowardly lines of procedure, or, face the front, do the best he can, and hope there will be enough cooperation with that viewpoint to result eventually in the restoration of order once again.

Challenge to All

This situation, he said, is a challenge to all of us, and we have the choice of ignoring, or of escaping it by surrender, or of accepting it courageously, adding, "The manly thing, the decent thing, the American thing, is to adjust our minds to the fact that what must be done can be done."

The man who cares enough about the welfare of his employer, profession and nation to be willing to accept responsibility for protection of that welfare; first in little, then in great, and ever greater things, is the eventually successful one, he emphasized, and there is not a village, town, city or nation in the world which has anywhere near enough of that sort of man or woman. The world is loaded with

Canada's Exports Rise Sharply Since Beginning of War

Ottawa, Jan. 16 (AP).—With most European markets curtailed by the war, Canada's domestic products flowed into the United States more freely than ever last December, increasing by more than 100 per cent over the corresponding month of 1938.

Figures released today by the Dominion bureau of statistics show total value of the exports was $101,021,522, compared with $68,887,665 a year before. Of the 1939 total, the United States took $53,995,864 worth compared with $24,380,460 in 1938.

The United Kingdom was in second place with an increase of $3,775,820 to $29,319,587. Decreased purchases by Italy, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, and Sweden in Europe, and China, French Africa, Japan and Egypt were recorded.

There were increased exports to 54 countries or groups of countries.

Wool Textile Output 40% Above 1938

Boston, Jan. 16 (AP).—The National Association of Wool Manufacturers reported today that the production activity of woolen textile mills in 1939, as indicated by figures for the first 11 months of the year, was approximately 40 per cent greater than in 1938 and about 5 per cent less than in the post-war record year of 1935.

Prices Move Upward in Quiet Trading; U. S. Aid to Finland Proves Puzzle; Treasury Bonds Dull and Irregular

New York, Jan. 6.—The stock market worked irregularly higher in the quietest trading of a month today, with the war and its American repercussions the chief topic of interest in Wall Street. Judged by the composite average the list added 0.25 point, with aviations, oils and miscellaneous manufacturing issues the leaders. The volume was only 526,280 shares. Satisfaction over more reassuring reports from Europe, indicating that the neutrals may yet be able to avoid being drawn into the struggle, was apparent in the financial district but there was nothing in the news to indicate an early armistice. Both tended to work for the bullish forces.

Less pleasing, and certainly less understandable, was the suggestion of President Roosevelt for helping Finland through credits to be granted by the Export-Import Bank, as outlined in his letter to Congressional leaders and discussed by him at his press conference.

Faults in Offer

The method suggested by the President has two obvious faults. In the first place it would do little for Finland. Use of the money would be limited to the purchasing of surplus American agricultural and manufactured products. Purchase of war materials would be denied, although it is possible for belligerents that have more comfortable foreign exchange balances, to buy anything they desire.

The present neutrality act gives to belligerents who have the money the right to buy war material here, provided they come and get it. The President's proposal in effect would provide Finland with the money but would then forbid it to buy materials which are being sold to others.

Actually, as the President pointed out in his press interview, Finland and Russia have not yet declared war on each other, so the provisions of the neutrality act do not apply to them. But the President's proposed loan would place restraints on Finland and as such must be a terrific disappointment to that country which has won the Nation-wide admiration of all Americans.

Export-Import Bank

The second objection to Mr. Roosevelt's proposal is strictly financial and brings to the fore some questions which should have been answered long ago by Washington, for the benefit of taxpayers. These have to do with what the Export-Import Bank has done with the $100,000,000 capital it was voted, what security did it get from borrowers on loans that were made, how much of the $100,000,000 can reasonably be expected to be returned to the Treasury, were loans made for business or policial reasons and why the President, assuming his Finnish proposal is adopted, should be granted blanket authority to loan an unnamed sum of money.

Money loaned to Finland will win the Nation-wide approval of the public, but it will accomplish little if there are strings tied to it and it will set a dangerous precedent if the President, or one of his bureaus, is granted blanket authority to loan to any government amounts which have not been specified by Congress. And while the matter is being discussed in Congress, the financial district would welcome a Congressional investigation of the Export-Import Bank to discover what it has done with the money already appropriated.

A few special issues were brought forward in today's market but the vast majority of speculative leaders moved by fractions. Dupont jumped 3¾, Allied Chemical 1¾, Westinghouse 1¾, Sears 1¾, and Manville a point.

Bonds Generally Dull

With turnover of bonds on the stock exchange dwindling to $4,961,000 against $6,166,000 in the preceding session, prices exhibited an easier tone today over much of the list. The decline in volume reflected inactivity in the domestic corporate list, Treasurys and foreign obligations being somewhat more active.

Changes in Treasury issues on the board were no better than mixed at the close. In over-counter trading final prices showed limited gains. The principal feature of the foreign section was continued pressure on Danish and Norwegian issues in which some new lows were reached as the market scanned European developments. Australian bonds had fractional gains and some Canadian issues were firm.

Treasury Sales

The Treasury reported yesterday that Government investment accounts has made net sales of $3,157,000 worth of Government securities during December.

Banks Protest Higher Jobless Insurance Plan

D. C. Bankers Also Criticize the Slight Tax Rate Reduction

The District of Columbia Bankers Association has adopted the following resolutions concerning the proposed increased amounts and benefits of unemployed insurance and the local tax situation:

Whereas, it has been reported in the public press that it is proposed to increase the benefits under the unemployment insurance both in the amount and the duration of the payments; and

Whereas, it is in the public interest to effect reductions in taxes rather than to increase the burden upon business and the taxpayer; now, therefore be it

Resolved, That the District of Columbia Bankers Association protest any such proposed legislation and also protest the very small proposed reduction in the tax rate from 3 to 2.7 per cent especially in view of the fact that the reserve fund has now mounted to upwards of $16,000,000, and is still increasing at a very rapid rate; and

Further resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Congress be respectfully petitioned to bring about legislation looking toward

1. Fixing the limit of the unemployment insurance reserve fund at not to exceed $10,000,000;

2. Permitting a variable tax rate to be fixed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, not to exceed 2.7 per cent, the rate to be made with the objective of meeting current needs and replenishment of the reserve fund when it falls below $10,000,000; and

3. In order to comply with the policy laid down by the Congress in recent amendments to the Federal act and to derive the benefits therefrom, the assessment upon any one salary or wage shall not be made upon any amount paid to any one person in excess of $3,000 in any one year.

Cotton Prices Close Lower Despite Rally

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 16.—Cotton futures staggered under an opening blast of foreign selling today, recovered balance and started a late climb forward that put final prices at the day's best levels. The market was still 1 to 6 points off at the finish.

When the list refused to respond more fully to sharp declines in the Bombay and Liverpool markets, buyers took heart. Prices steadied at opening declines but it wasn't until the last hour that real support developed.

The demand was largely in the form of Wall Street covering operations centered in the May position. Purchases were estimated at around 12,000 bales with contracts supplied by operators who wanted to cash their profits on the advance.

Crude oil was quoted 5¾ cents a pound bid in the Southeast and Valley with a few sales at that level reported in the valley. Texas was 5¾ bid.

U. S. Firms Subscribe To Canada's War Loan

Ottawa, Jan. 16 (Canadian Press). The Bank of Canada was deluged today by a wave of subscriptions of $5,000 or less for the first Dominion war loan of the present conflict. Finance Minister Ralston had previously expressed the hope that the $200,000,000 issue would have wide distribution among smaller investors.

The first day's canvass brought subscription of 57 per cent of the loan, investors turning over $114,650,000 to the Dominion's war chest. Canadian branches of United States companies figured largely in the subscription list, including Imperial Oil, S. S. Kresge Co., William Wrigley, jr., Co., Kelvinator of Canada and others.

Touchdowners Pay Tribute To Grid Stars

Kinnick, Kavanaugh And Kimbrough Are Honored at Banquet

Other speakers included Coach Anderson; Senator Glass and Donald G. Herring, sr. Anderson attributed his selection by the Associated Press as "Coach of the Year" to luck, saying, "with a break here or there any of you coaches present might have been up here tonight instead of me. In saying this, he named Coaches Bergman, of C. U.; Jack Hagerty, of Georgetown, and Norton, of Texas A. & M.

Herring spoke following the presentation of a special trophy to his son, Donald, for "player contributing most to college football in 1939" and deeply moved his listeners with his appreciation of the sympathetic reaction of the American public to his boy's misfortune. Young Herring lost his leg following an injury received while playing for Princeton.

Other trophy recipients were Bob Nowaskey, G. W. end, the Arch McDonald-WJSV award for "outstanding D. C. college player of 1939 and "most valuable" players of five local colleges. They were Joe McFadden, G. U. quarterback; Murphy Booth, G. W. blocking back; Ralph Albarano, Maryland tackle; Pete Sachon, C. U. quarterback, and George Brown, A. U. tackle and end. These five trophies were donated by the Washington Redskins.

Entertainment was provided by performers from the current Loew's Capitol stage show. They included Jack Powell, drummer; Hollywood's Beverley Roberts, singer, and Dean Murphy, clever impersonator. Murphy drew down the applause of the evening for his skits, particularly his take-off of President Roosevelt.

Anacostia Five Beaten, 38-21, By G. W. Cubs

Colonials Win 10th in Row With Fitzgerald's 7 Points Leading Attack

Nine George Washington University freshmen basketers contributed to a 38-to-21 victory over Anacostia High yesterday, the 7 points of Center Fitzgerald being high for the game. The triumph at Anacostia was the tenth straight for the Colonial yearlings.

Though never able to threaten the fast-flying Frosh, Anacostia managed to make the game interesting. It was on the short end of a 21-to-10 count after the first half, but held its own better in the second half. Lambert Anderson, with 6 points, paced the Indians' attack, though Hagan, Placos and Leukhardt turned in good games.

Eagles and Gulls Tie at 4 and 4

as the Gulls were shooting high and from way out.

Bill Lahti and Ken Partis each wasted single-handed scoring opportunities as they broke away from a scrimmage around their own net and outraced the Atlantic City defense, but Lahti shot wide and Partis lost the puck on two occasions as he faded out of position.

The Eagles' first period scores and assists were divided among a half-dozen players. After 9 minutes without a real scoring threat, Ken Partis took a short pass from Bill Lahti and opened the point-making in 9:11.

Paul Courteau made it 2-0 when the Eagles continued their offensive play 2 minutes later. Mike Germann passed to Courteau, who caught Seagull Goalie Henry McQueston out of position in 11:43. The red light flashed again 15 seconds later when Alan Covert scored in 11:48, with the assist to Roy Covert.

The Gulls concentrated on roughing it and their total offensive play in the first 20 minutes wasn't enough to worry Goalie Lee.

As it turned out, Delta Gamma had gone undefeated in the sorority league and had only to defeat the Alphas to win undisputed championship of American University. The Delta Gammas also boast such illustrious alumni as Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg, Mrs. Alfred M. Landon and Ruth Bryan Owen Rohde. it was learned.

The Gammas, however, were taken by the Alphas in grand style, and Your Correspondent was taken by both the Alphas and the Gammas—especially by the play of a small brown haired number with one of those toothpaste ad smiles.

It was noted that six girls played on each team, and after much confusion it was learned this was as it should be. The Alphas' captain, Bee Gibson, did most of the playing—as far as points went. She scored nine.

Injuries were strikingly absent—as a matter of fact, when one of the players wrested the ball away from an opponent, she muttered a grim, but polite, "I'm so sorry."

They were hauling a petite blonde number off the floor as Your Correspondent came upon the scene of action. Somebody said she had a sprained ankle. Sensing a story, Your Correspondent dashed off in hot pursuit, but somehow ended up on the players' bench surrounded by the sisters of good old Delta Gamma and Alpha Phi. Oh, yes, Delta Gamma now has to play Alpha Chi Omega for the championship of American University.

Foreign Markets

By the Associated Press

London, Jan. 16.—Stock market prices were firmly maintained today as fear of German invasion of Holland or Belgium died down. Reassembly of Parliament, however, kept orders either way to a minimum. British gilt-edged securities advanced slightly although top prices were trimmed a bit. Oil stocks improved and Kaffirs attracted a small following. Industrial leaders moved along evenly and home rails held their ground.

Paris.—Prices were shaded in the bourse today after initial improvement, leaving the close narrowly uneven. Sentiment was considerably more cheerful as week-end rumors of threats to the low countries appeared baseless. Rentes closed 35 to 250 centimes lower.

Liverpool.—Cotton futures dropped 19 to 29 points today under active selling by Bombay, liquidation and hedging.

Touchdowners Pay Tribute To Grid Stars

utes with a series of humorous stories.

Other speakers included Coach Anderson; Senator Glass and Donald G. Herring, sr. Anderson attributed his selection by the Associated Press as "Coach of the Year" to luck, saying, "with a break here or there any of you coaches present might have been up here tonight instead of me. In saying this, he named Coaches Bergman, of C. U.; Jack Hagerty, of Georgetown, and Norton, of Texas A. & M.

Herring spoke following the presentation of a special trophy to his son, Donald, for "player contributing most to college football in 1939" and deeply moved his listeners with his appreciation of the sympathetic reaction of the American public to his boy's misfortune. Young Herring lost his leg following an injury received while playing for Princeton.

Other trophy recipients were Bob Nowaskey, G. W. end, the Arch McDonald-WJSV award for "outstanding D. C. college player of 1939 and "most valuable" players of five local colleges. They were Joe McFadden, G. U. quarterback; Murphy Booth, G. W. blocking back; Ralph Albarano, Maryland tackle; Pete Sachon, C. U. quarterback, and George Brown, A. U. tackle and end. These five trophies were donated by the Washington Redskins.

Entertainment was provided by performers from the current Loew's Capitol stage show. They included Jack Powell, drummer; Hollywood's Beverley Roberts, singer, and Dean Murphy, clever impersonator. Murphy drew down the applause of the evening for his skits, particularly his take-off of President Roosevelt.

Anacostia Five Beaten, 38-21, By G. W. Cubs

Colonials Win 10th in Row With Fitzgerald's 7 Points Leading Attack

Nine George Washington University freshmen basketers contributed to a 38-to-21 victory over Anacostia High yesterday, the 7 points of Center Fitzgerald being high for the game. The triumph at Anacostia was the tenth straight for the Colonial yearlings.

Though never able to threaten the fast-flying Frosh, Anacostia managed to make the game interesting. It was on the short end of a 21-to-10 count after the first half, but held its own better in the second half. Lambert Anderson, with 6 points, paced the Indians' attack, though Hagan, Placos and Leukhardt turned in good games.

as the Gulls were shooting high and from way out.

Bill Lahti and Ken Partis each wasted single-handed scoring opportunities as they broke away from a scrimmage around their own net and outraced the Atlantic City defense, but Lahti shot wide and Partis lost the puck on two occasions as he faded out of position.

The Eagles' first period scores and assists were divided among a half-dozen players. After 9 minutes without a real scoring threat, Ken Partis took a short pass from Bill Lahti and opened the point-making in 9:11.

Paul Courteau made it 2-0 when the Eagles continued their offensive play 2 minutes later. Mike Germann passed to Courteau, who caught Seagull Goalie Henry McQueston out of position in 11:43. The red light flashed again 15 seconds later when Alan Covert scored in 11:48, with the assist to Roy Covert.

The Gulls concentrated on roughing it and their total offensive play in the first 20 minutes wasn't enough to worry Goalie Lee.

spoke, and this evidently was their mistake. They never rallied after that experience.

As it turned out, Delta Gamma had gone undefeated in the sorority league and had only to defeat the Alphas to win undisputed championship of American University. The Delta Gammas also boast such illustrious alumni as Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg, Mrs. Alfred M. Landon and Ruth Bryan Owen Rohde. it was learned.

The Gammas, however, were taken by the Alphas in grand style, and Your Correspondent was taken by both the Alphas and the Gammas —especially by the play of a small brown haired number with one of those toothpaste ad smiles.

It was noted that six girls played on each team, and after much confusion it was learned this was as it should be. The Alphas' captain, Bee Gibson, did most of the playing—as far as points went. She scored nine.

Injuries were strikingly absent—as a matter of fact, when one of the players wrested the ball away from an opponent, she muttered a grim, but petite, "I'm so sorry."

They were hauling a petite blonde number off the floor as Your Correspondent came upon the scene of action. Somebody said she had a sprained ankle. Sensing a story, Your Correspondent dashed off in hot pursuit, but somehow ended up on the players' bench surrounded by the sisters of good old Delta Gamma and Alpha Phi. Oh, yes, Delta Gamma now has to play Alpha Chi Omega for the championship of American University.

Foreign Markets

By the Associated Press

London, Jan. 16.—Stock market prices were firmly maintained today as fear of German invasion of Holland or Belgium died down. Reassembly of Parliament, however, kept orders either way to a minimum. British gilt-edged securities advanced slightly although top prices were trimmed a bit. Oil stocks improved and kaffirs attracted a small following. Industrial leaders moved along evenly and home rails held their ground.

Paris.—Prices were shaded in the bourse today after initial improvement, leaving the close narrowly uneven. Sentiment was considerably more cheerful as week-end rumors of threats to the low countries appeared baseless. Rentes closed 35 to 230 centimes lower.

Amsterdam.—Bourse prices settled into a fractionally irregular price range today. American issues started out on a firm footing.

Liverpool.—Cotton futures dropped 19 to 29 points today under active selling by Member, Rendleston and Sedgine.

Approximately Two Acres Alta Vista, just beyond Bethesda, Md.—$12,750
Beautifully landscaped; rolling and wooded. Where can one find a lovely place like this, at the price, within easy thirty minutes by motor to downtown Washington? A very comfortable four-bedroom house was built on just the right spot about thirty years ago, commanding a splendid view. It is in excellent condition and lends itself to whatever the purchaser's needs might be, in the way of remodelling. Then again the conservative buyer might consider it prudent to move right in as it is—and make changes from time to time as he sees fit. A most attractive feature of the land is its generous frontage—300 feet, on a well-paved street, with a circular driveway to the house, which is well back. The consensus is that this section of Alta Vista is the best. Offered to settle an estate and the price is not only interesting as a home but as an investment. Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Not every bridge question can be solved with a yes or no answer. There are many hands which can be bid in alternative ways. Although results generally determine which was the best bid at the time the player was confronted with the choice it might not have been apparent.

This is also true of play, particularly opening leads. The so-called "normal" lead may not be the winning one, but that does not mean it was bad. Partners frequently are scolded because they misguessed a finesse or chose a losing line of play, but this faultfinding is unjustified unless the missing honor, or correct plan, was indicated by the bidding or other inferences.

It often develops that it would have been better to open the bidding with a suit rather than no-trump, or vice versa; sometimes it turns out that it would have been better not to bid at all, but it doesn't necessarily follow that the poor wretch who did so was in error.

♠ Q 7 5 4
♣ K Q 9 8 4 2

It is a very close question. Certainly some players would open the hand with one club. While it falls a little short in high cards, it has normal rebiddable values in the club suit. The four cards in spades are also attractive and tend to tempt the player to open the hand. It is a borderline case. We would not criticize partner whether he bid or passed.

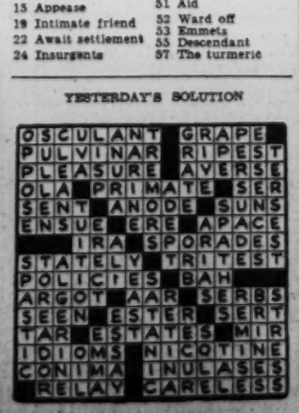
YESTERDAY'S SOLUTION



Listen!

with Slocum

There's considerable activity on the daytime front. For instance, there's a brand new serial beginning Monday, January 22 which will be heard daily, Monday through Friday, 1:30 to 1:45 p. m.

It's called "The Right to Happiness" and the advance notices say that the theme is the social problems besetting Americans in 1940 in their quest for security and happiness. It also seems that two typical American families, the Kranskys and the Burkes, will be the focal figures employed by the author to dramatize social conditions as they are brought about by today's conditions. Irna Phillips is the author. If the Kranskys' and the Burkes' social problems are anything like ours Miss Phillips really has a lot of story material. That's if paying the rent is a social problem.

As we said before there's really activity on the serial front: Here's another example: Diana Barrymore, 18-year-old daughter of old John himself, has been chosen to play socialite Mona Sheldon in the "Big Sister" dramas heard Mondays through Fridays at 11:30 a. m. Just before her debut, Miss Barrymore arrived for rehearsal with a bandaged hand, having cut a vein when she broke a goldfish bowl (I don't know what she was doing with the goldfish bowl; if you must know write and ask her). But she just laughed off the injury and went ahead with her part—you can't get a Barrymore down, we always say.

Then "Life Begins" begins on Monday, January 22, at 11:15 a. m. Mrs. Bessie Flynn, a leading radio authoress and actress, both writes and stars in the show. She created "Martha Meade," the elderly daughter of a proud family who finds herself penniless and alone in the world and who is forced to seek employment as houseworker. Circumstances places her in the unhappy and unruly "Craig" family where "Life Begins" for Martha Meade and for the listeners to this serial.

It seems to me this should dispose of all your time very nicely for any given day. If you do have a few free minutes you can always stir up a new salad or dessert.

By ELLERY QUEEN

The Dragon's Teeth

Multimillionaire Cadmus Cole died, but Ellery Queen almost beat him to it with peritonitis. So, Ellery's illness was untimely, but he designated Beau Rummel (partner in Ellery Queen, Inc.) to impersonate Queen so they wouldn't have to refund the $15,000 and also because the mystery interested Ellery. He had the facts from Beau: Cole had died on the Argonaut at sea on June 30, ostensibly of a severe heart attack, and had been buried at sea. The crew had been paid off and discharged; the Argonaut was in drydock; and de Carlos (Cole's agent and companion) was on his way to the States. Beau went first to see Lloyd Goossens, Cole's attorney, where he first met de Carlos, and then reported back to Ellery.

Chapter 4

"OH, THE case." Beau stared out the window. "That mysterious case we were all hopped up about. Well, prepare for a shock. Either old man Cole was as nutty as a chocolate bar, or we're up against a real baffler."

"What's the assignment, you aggravating sea-lawyer?"

"Merely to find a couple of missing heirs!"

"Oh, no," groaned Ellery. "That's too much. It can't be. How about the will itself? Did you see it?"

"Yes, and it has its screwy angles." Beau explained Cole's will to Ellery.

"But how is it that Cole didn't know where his heirs were?" demanded Ellery when Beau has finished.

BEAU SHRUGGED. Cadmus Cole's unfortunate marital experience in Windsor at the trun of the century had embittered his against the whole institution of marriage. He had had a younger brother, Huntley, whom he had sent to New York to study art. In 1906, in New York, Huntley Cole secretly married his model, a woman named Nadine Malloy. In 1907 a child, Margo, was born; and Cadmus, for the first time learning of his younger brother's marriage, became enraged at what he considered Huntley's ingratitude.

Cadmus stopped sending Huntley money and swore he should never speak to his brother again. Huntley took his wife and infant daughter to Paris, where he painted futively for two years, living in poverty, his only means of support his wife's meager earnings as a model.

"This Huntley," Beau explained, "was too proud to write to his rich brother. But his wife wasn't, because her brat was starving, and so she wrote to Cadmus pleading for help. Cadmus replied—that's how we know about the Parisian episode of the Huntley branch—saying that his brother had made his bed, and so on—the usual sanctimonious tripe.

"Anyway, Cadmus turned his sister-in-law down cold. Huntley found out about it, apparently, because right after Cadmus' letter arrived he committed suicide. There's absolutely no record of what happened to Nadine and little Margo. So one of our jobs is to pick up that 30-year-old trail."

"That makes Margo Cole one heiress—if she's found and if she qualifies under the will. How about the other?"

"Well, Cadmus and Huntley had a younger sister, Monica. Reading between the lines it seems that, hearing about Huntley's suicide in Paris, Monica blamed Cadmus for it and just upped and quit her sourpuss brother cold. Walked out on Cadmus and the Windsor ancestral mansion and disappeared. That was not long after Huntley's death in 1909.

"We know sketchily what happened to her, too, after leaving Vermont. She had a lot of tough luck supporting herself until 1911, when she met a man named Shawn, an accountant or something, in Chicago. Shawn married her. A daughter, Kerrie, was born to Monica in 1918—just about the time her husband died of spinal meningitis in a Chicago hospital.

"Monica was left without a cent. Desperate, she wrote to her brother Cadmus, explaining what had happened and asking for help, just as Huntley's wife had written nine years before. Well, Monica received practically the same answer: she'd put herself outside the reservation by marrying, and she could go take a flying jump at the moon. That's the last record Cadmus had of his sister's—and little Kerrie's—whereabouts. Monica's letter was postmarked Chicago, September 8, 1918."

"Nothing for Monica, eh?" mused Mr. Queen.

"Not a jit. Of course, she may be dead. Cole left the bulk of his estate, as I said, to his two nieces, Margo Cole and Kerrie Shawn . . . when, as, and if."

"How about insanity?" asked Mr. Queen hopefully.

"No dice. Goossens has already consulted psychiatrists. From the picture, they agree Cole was medically sane. Legallly, of course, he had a right to put any cockeyed conditions he pleased on the passing of his estate. De Carlos, who's in the best position to know, poohpoohs the whole idea, of course. He ought to, since Cole's left him a million bucks in cash and a home for life if he wants it in the Tarrytown mansion!"

"Did you question De Carlos about the circumstances of Cole's death?"

Beau nodded. "But he's a cool customer, and he stuck to his yarn. I bawled him out for not holding on to Capt. Angus and the radio operator when he scattered the crew of the yacht all over creation."

"What's the point?"

"The witnesses who attested the validity of Cole's signature at the bottom of the will were Angus, the radio operator, and De Carlos."

"What of that?"

"Before a will may be probated, two of the subscribing witnesses must be produced and examined, if they're within the State and are competent and able to testify. In the absence of any witness, the surrogate at his discretion may dispense with his testimony and admit the will to probate on the testimony of the other. So that in the absence of Capt. Angus and the radio operator, we'll have to rely completely on the testimony of De Carlos."

Mr. Queen frowned. "I don't care for that."

"Well, we'll have a check-up, because the surrogate undoubtedly will insist on better proof of signature than the mere word of a single witness. He'll want proof of the testator's handwriting, and of Angus', and so on. There must be hundreds of Cole's autographs extant, and they'll be examined."

"And I have to go to the mountains!" groaned Mr. Queen. "Blast my vermiform appendix!"

BEAU ARMED two operatives with the names and descriptions of Capt. Angus and the Argonaut's crew and sent them down to Santiago de Cuba to begin a discreet inquiry. He also set a reliable French agency on the trail of Nadine and Margo Cole, advertised extensively in the French and American papers, and then set off on the Kerrie Shawn trail.

Wrathfully, Mr. Queen departed for the Adirondacks. From this Elba he followed the fortunes of Mr. Edmund De Carlos through the New York gossip columnists and society tattlers. De Carlos, as co-executor of the Cole estate and co-trustee-to-be, had granted permission to himself, as beneficiary, to take up residence at the Tarrytown mansion even before probate of the will.

The house and grounds had been under the supervision of a caretaker until the man died early in 1937. Apparently Cole had never quite got round to hiring another, for the place had been left boarded up and untended. Now De Carlos moved in, hired decorators and servants, and established himself in lone grandeur as lord of the manor.

He promptly set off on a fierce hunt for pleasure. The man's bearded face, menacing teeth, and bushy hair began to appear in newspaper photographs with regularity. Overnight he became New York's premier bon vivant, leading benefactor of various lonely ladies of the chorus, lavish spender and frequenter of notorious night clubs and gambling rooms.

"If he keeps up this pace," thought Mr. Queen grimly, "that million-dollar legacy will collapse under the weight of its own mortgages!"

Edmund De Carlos was the son of a Brazilian father and an English mother, born in the Brazilian interior on a coffee plantation in the year 1889. That made him 50 years old, ruminated Mr. Queen from his lofty exile; in his pictures the pirate seemed younger.

Mr. Queen decided suddenly that Mr. De Carlos would bear watching.

MEANWHILE, Beau was scampering along a cold spoor.

Beginning with a clue 21 years old—the knowledge that Monica Cole Shaw's husband died in a Chicago hospital—Beau followed a trail that led to a Chicago tenement, then to a secretarial school, where, apparently, the young widow had enrolled to learn a practical means of sustaining her life and her daughter's when Cadmus Cole refused financial assistance.

St. Louis, Minneapolis, New York—cheap rooming houses, small apartments, a draughty theatrical hotel, a dancing and "dramatic" school for children. Eagerly Beau haunted Broadway. Finally, in the curling files of a theatrical agency, he unearthed an old photograph of a beautiful girl-child named Kerrie Shawn. But then he lost the trail.

During his New York investigation Beau learned from Lloyd Goossens that the Surrogate had been satisfied with the proofs of Cadmus Cole's testamentary signature. There were plentiful examples of Cole's handwriting for comparison purposes—on checks, on legal documents, on records in foreign and American banks dating back almost 20 years. Capt. Angus' signature was likewise authenticated through the Argonaut's log (in which, Mr. Rummell was interested to learn, the details of Cole's last illness and death were meticulously recorded, agreeing to the letter with the verbal account given by De Carlos).

"Almost ready," Goossens told Beau. "Assets, for the size of the estate, are in a very fluid condition. The fourth citation is to be published in a few days. Queen—so where do you stand with the hunt for those two girls?"

Beau dug in again. He found a new clue which led westward. But in Cincinnati he came up against a dead end.

"I can't understand why this femme Kerrie Shawn hasn't answered the personals I've published," Beau complained to Ellery over the long-distance telephone. "Unless she's left the United States, or is dead. As far as that's concerned, there's been enough newspaper publicity to call her back from Africa, or from the dead."

Mr. Queen pondered. "There's a clear record that Monica Shawn was giving her child dancing and dramatic lessons, isn't there? So, working from the professional angle——"

"Listen, Big Brain," snarled Beau, "I've badgered agents and managers in New York so much they're threatening to have me pinched if I so much as show my pan again. That theatrical lead is strictly from hunger, I tell you!"

"Where," inquired Mr. Queen mildly, "does ever aspiring American mama with a beautiful child of real or fancied talent eventually, and inevitably, wind up?"

"Am I a dope!" roared Beau. "Good-by!"

Ten days later Ellery received a wire from Hollywood:

"Have found Kerry woo woo exclamation point Beau."

AT THE CENTRAL Casting Bureau in Hollywood Beau had found no Shawns, but three Kerries. He examined their portraits. Kerrie Acres was a Negro. Kerrie St. Alban was an aged character actress. Kerrie Land was a young girl.

Her face was nice. Light-colored eyes looked straight at him; they fizzed, like champagne. A chin-cleft, a turned-up nose, soft dark rolls of hair . . . nice, nice.

Beau compared Kerrie Land's face with the photograph in his possession of Kerrie Shawn as a child. There was an unmistakable resemblance. But he had to be sure.

He wormed an Argyle Avenue address and telephone number out of a Bureau attendant and called the number.

A woman answered. He identified himself in a raspy voice as "Central Casting" and sked for Kerrie Land. The woman said Kerrie Land had been on location somewhere for two months, and how come? She was expected back within a few days. She slammed the receiver.

Beau returned to his hotel, looked himself over, decided his clothes were shabby enough to lull the suspicions of even a Hollywood landlady, checked out and, carrying one ragged handbag, walked to the Argyle Avenue address.

Beau began to feel like Santa Claus.

He rang the front doorbell and was admitted by a shapeless woman wearing an ancient dinner-gown and carpet-slippers.

"I want a room," he said.

"Extra?" She looked him over without friendliness.

"I'm looking for a job in the movies," Beau admitted.

"Six dollars in advance. Your own soap and towels." The landlady did not stir until he let her inspect the bulging interior of his wallet. "Oh, new in town. Well, I'll show you what I got. Throw parties?"

"I don't know anyone in Hollywood," said Beau.

"With that roll, you'll know plenty soon enough."

"I'm respectable, if that's what you mean, beautiful," grinned Beau.

"See you don't forget it. I run a decent house. Name?"

"Queen. Ellery Queen."

She shrugged and shuffled upstairs. Beau was very critical of the rooms she indifferently displayed. He watched the little cardboard nameplates on the doors. When he saw one that said: Kerrie Land—Violet Day, he chose the nearest room on the same floor, paid a week's rent in advance, and then settled down to await the return of Cadmus Cole's niece.

How To Relieve Misery of Your

Massage throat, chest, and back with plenty of Vicks VapoRub at bedtime. Then spread a thick layer on chest and cover with a warmed cloth.

VapoRub's double action brings double relief. It acts as a poultice to penetrate the surface skin; and its soothing medicinal vapors are breathed direct to the irritated air passages.

Try it, to loosen phlegm—to clear air passages—check tendency to cough—and also to relieve the tightness and soreness of chest muscles.

Venereal Ills Bring Boom For Quacks

Remedy Racket Is on the Rise, U. S. Survey Discloses

Quackery and drugstore "remedies" are seriously obstructing the Nation's venereal disease control program, the United States Public Health Service reported yesterday as it announced the startling results of a 26-State survey.

The investigation, conducted in 35 large cities by the American Social Hygiene Association in cooperation with the Public Health Service, revealed the following information:

The "guaranteed cure" racket is costing the American public tens of millions of dollars annually.

More persons are going to drug stores and quacks for diagnosis and treatment than are going to physicians' offices and clinics.

Sixty-two per cent of the 1,151 drug stores visited pretended to diagose syphilis and gonorrhea and offered to sell remedies.

About 30 different preparations were available as "remedies," all but three or four of which were found to be worthless as far as their effect on the diseases was concerned.

Advertising on Decline

An oddity of the report, prepared by Mary S. Edwards and Paul M. Kinsie, both of the American Social Hygiene Association, and published by the Public Health Service, was its revelation that while more and more diseased persons are being victimized by quack doctors and unethical druggists, advertising of these services and nostrums seems to be decreasing in volume.

About half of the remedy sellers urged the customer to have his "friend" see a doctor. Only 7 per cent of the 1,151 pharmacies visited refused to diagnose or sell remedies.

Mixtures of boric acid, glycerin, etc., which cost a few cents to put up, sold at $1 to $3 a bottle. Though harmless, probably, they were also worthless.

Comparison with the findings of a similar survey made in 1933 showed how the racket has increased. In 1933, 51 per cent of the drug clerks interviewed were counter-prescribing; in 1939, 62 per cent. Then, 17.5 per cent did not diagnose, but sold remedies; now, 31 per cent. The percentage which refused to diagnose or sell remedies was 32 in 1933, 7 in 1939.

Job Stabilization Concern Of U. S., Says O'Mahoney

By Felix Cotten.
Post Staff Writer

Stabilization of employment "is the central problem confronting business and government," Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming, chairman of the Monopoly Committee, declared yesterday.

O'Mahoney made the observation in summing up testimony presented before the committee during the day concerning the closing of copper mines by producing companies in 1921.

Cornelius F. Kelley, New York, president of the Anaconda Copper Mining Corporation, was interrogated by committee counsel with regard to the formation by large companies after the World War of a copper export organization to deal with sales problems resulting from the creation of foreign buying cartels.

The organization was formed under the Webb-Pomerene act, passed by Congress in 1918 at the exhortation of copper, steel, and other producers. The act granted exemption from the antitrust laws so far as export business was concerned. A condition of this exemption was that no combination in restraint of domestic trade should be formed.

The thesis of the committee's experts was that an organization formed under the Webb-Pomerene act to handle export business resulted in the closing of copper mines from the spring of 1921 to the same period in 1922 by agreement of the major participants in the combination.

David E. Scoll, committee attorney, developed the fact that after the war the industry was confronted with a huge oversupply of copper, since governments had overbought and there was also a great deal of scrap metal.

Kelley said he was away and did not participate in the discussions relating to the closing of the mines. But if they were closed by combination, he said, the action was entirely justified, both from the standpoint of economic necessity and law.

O'Mahoney commented that the action of the companies was illustrative of the need for stabilizing employment, thereby making it unnecessary for industry "to shift the unemployment problem to government to be handled by the latter in an uneconomic manner."
